—Following took part in a very creditable manner: Master and Miss Ballantine, Misses Pope, Eddy, Lamb and Richardson.

—Before giving out the closing hymn in Grace church last Sunday night, Dr. Shinn stated that although he was opposed to the introduction of personal matters during a religious service, he could not refrain from saying that he had never felt so many regrets at being away from his parish as now, that the services had been made so beautiful by the new choir, and now that there had come to be such a renewal of its vigor in all the departments of church work.

—Mr. Andrew S. March's house on Park street was entered some time early Wednesday morning, and some solid silver ladies, some plated ware, and cigars were taken. About 10 o'clock one of the children was frightened by a noise, and roused the house, but the burglar had escaped. He gained an entrance by the pantry window, and, seriously enough, a dog which slept in the house made no disturbance, although it usually raises an alarm if strangers come about. This is said to be the case with the other houses entered recently, both here and in Westford and Wellesley; the dogs are not heard from during the visits of the burglars. The fact that plated ware was taken shows that the burglar was not a professional, and the police are at work upon the case.

—The residence of Mr. Luther Dana, 186 Park street, was the scene of a very pleasant party, Wednesday evening. Mr. Dana, in his old age, is as youthful in spirit as he was 50 years ago. He is also very hospitable and likes to gather his friends about him, young and old. So invitations were sent out to a few of his old friends, among whom were Mr. and Mrs. Henry Fuller, Mrs. William H. Park and others, to spend a social and musical evening. An elaborate program of 20 numbers was rendered, consisting of selections for male quartet, by the A. O. U. W. Male Quartet; Mr. Arthur Briggs, Mr. J. Herbert Potter, Mr. Edward L. Bacon, Mr. Frank W. Potter, assisted by Mrs. C. F. Bacon and Mr. C. S. Farley. Bass solo with piano accompaniment, Mr. C. L. Bacon; baritone solo, Mr. C. S. Farley, and duet for violin and piano, Mr. J. Herbert Potter, Miss Lucretia and Mary Fuller. The piano was presided over by Mrs. Fuller. During the evening a fine collation was served and at 11 o'clock the party broke up, after having spent a delightful evening.

—The Newton Savings Bank has again had a very prosperous quarter, having added to its list of depositors, a number of deposits, and has declared a semi-annual interest of 2 per cent to depositors. The July statement shows the total assets to be $1,942,194.30, of which $1,827,018.88 are in cash and in undivided earnings, and $115,175.42 are in loans on real estate amounting to $1,282,488.38; on personal securities, $470,799.99; city bonds, $61,000; bank notes, $3,330; deposits on interest in National Banks $43,947.72; the expense account was $3,525.67, and the cash on hand June 30, was $5,652.54. The increase in deposits since March 31st is $187,500. There was a great number of depositors on June 30th and July 1st, and on the first day $11,351.83 was taken in and on the second, $9,956.63. Miss Dunklee and Miss Kent have found it necessary to work very hard during the month of this week, to straighten out things after such a rush, and the prosperity of the bank is evidence of its careful management, and of the wise economy of Newton people.

—Rather an odd looking vehicle was drawn through some of the streets on Saturday evening. Whoever saw it stopped to look, but only a few guessed what it was for. It hung low down on the wheels, and had steps projecting from the rear. There were lamps on the front and an overhanging hood for the driver. This strange wagon was taken up to the residence of Mrs. E. T. Eldridge, where a company of friends had assembled to examine it. It was the new automobile of the hospital, and although unfinished was far enough advanced to show that the Newton Cottage Hospital is in the matter of transportation of sick and injured persons. Murray & Farrell of Newton are the builders, and it is safe to say that nothing more complete has ever been made for hospital uses. For style, comfort and strength it is a model, and no doubt will be duplicated for other places as soon as it becomes known. The builders have added greatly to their reputation by this excellent piece of work.

—One of the plans advocated by a prominent real estate owner, is for Newton to build a boulevard of Washington street, as Brookline has done with its main street, to the great advantage of property along its line. He would begin at Washington street from Nonantum square, take all the land between the street and the railroad, sell the houses to be moved off, for what they would bring, and give the whole width to the street, at least as far as the Wellesley line in Lower Falls. The expense, he said, could be provided for by a city loan, and in ten years property along the street would be worth enough more to pay all the expenses of the widening. If he was a younger man he would like to go into a city election with this for an issue, and would add to it the widening of Beacon street to 60 feet, its entire length within the city, and then he would have a line of horse cars on both streets. Although one of the most conservative citizens of Newton, this gentleman is confident that such an improvement would do more for the property of Newton than anything else which could be thought of.

—The Result of the Investigation.

The Massachusetts Legislature having been informed that it was being taken to free dinners at the Algonquin Club in Boston, has investigated the charge, and finds the same to be true. Members who went to and ate the dinners have discovered that they did so and must be astonished thereat. The reports, as given elsewhere, on the lobby question, have a certain melancholy interest in reflecting the present state of legislative morals.

The investigators admit that the State House is infested with the vermin of the lobby, but they offer the excuse that the bugs have been there a good while. That's so, and some of them seem to be bigger bugs than some of the legislators.

Miss Eames in Paris.

The Bath Times has this to say of Miss Emma Eames, a former member of Channing church quartet:

Emma Eames has again captured the Parisian heart in her presentation, or rather her creation of "Zaire" at the Grand Opera. All the critics are raving over her, and American, English and French writers are striving to out do one another in adjective to describe the beauty of the Bath girl. An exchange says: "Never did an American girl win such a tremendous success in so short a time, as has been won by this talented and dashing daughter of Maine. Why, her achievements have been almost incredible. None of the great performers in the cast of this opera, except Miss Eames, ever before created a role at the Grand Opera House at Paris. That 'divine young American,' as a celebrated French critic calls her, made her debut a year or so ago in 'Romeo et Juliette,' and she at once achieved a triumph. A while afterwards she appeared in 'Faust,' and then when 'Ascanio' was brought out two months ago, she created the role of Colombe. So this makes her second creation of a leading part in the most magnificent opera house in the world. No other American has ever done so much. It is amazing the way she has taken Paris."

—Newton Natural History Society.

The "Field Day" of this society, as announced, was held last Saturday at Norumbega. The party left Riverside about 4 p. m. in boats and rowed directly down the river to the site on the west bank of the Charles, where Prof. E. N. Horsford has decided the ancient port of Norumbega once stood, and where he has erected a picturesque tower mostly of rough glacial boulders to mark the spot once held and occupied by the Northmen.

There the party was augmented by others who had driven over in carriages. Prof. Horsford had been invited to accompany the society on this pilgrimage to Norumbega. His reply expressed so much doubt of his being able to do so that notice of his possible coming was not given. Hardly had the party assembled around the tower, and a few climbed to its summit to enjoy the beautiful and charming pictures on every side, when a span of horses dashed into the little open space, and there, in the carriage, sat the genial, eagerly wished for Professor, who was heartily welcomed by the assembled crowd. After a little description of the discovery of this old camping ground, there in his opinion the old Norsemen lived and died away, he led the party to an old ditch which he decided upon, surrounded the fort, and spent an hour or more in describing the points of history and the causes that led him to decide that the almost mythological Norumbega was in truth located on the banks of the Charles.

Next a thousand years ago these men from the north doubtless had many cities and villages scattered along the New England coast and upon the banks of the larger rivers. Prof. Horsford believes that several of these settlements were located on Charles river and that he has discovered many evidences of their work and occupation. He exhibited some charts giving the maps published by the early navigators, describing the strange lands they had discovered and seen.

These he distributed among the audience. Before he left the different members of the society expressed to him their thanks for his coming and gratitude for the information he had so kindly and freely given.

Then the party took their boats and rowed down to Point Comfort, where a landing was made, and there on the hillside among the trees lunch was taken.

Re-entering the boats the party were out in moments at streams at sunset, and beheld the beautiful tinted clouds in the western sky.

As the party neared Riverside music came stealing across the water from the Newton Boat Club house, where a band was playing and the river seemed alive with boats slowly drifting up and down to enjoy that and the bright moonlight which was filling the river from bank to bank with silver sheen.

The afternoon and evening had been simply perfect and those who enjoyed that "Field Day" will remember it as one of the pleasantest of the year.

A DEAD SOLDIER.

He sleeps at last—a hero of his race. Death and the night lies so on his face, While the faint summer stars, like sentinels, Hover above his lonely resting-place.

A soldier, yet less soldier than a man— Who gave to justice what a soldier can. The courage of his arm, his patient art, And the fire soul that flamed when wrong began.

Not Caesar, Alexander, Antonine, No despot torn of the old warrior line, No Napoleon, whose sword, whose hands Caught at the throat of love upon its shrine— But one who worshipped in the sweeter years Those rights that men have gained with blood and tears;

And led his armies like a priest of men, And fought his battles with anointed spears. —George Edgar Montgomery, in Harper's Magazine for July.

Boston Herald Prizes.

The Boston Herald announces that the result of the Herald scholarship competition will be made known on Monday, July 7, in its columns. This competition has excited great interest, and the attention attracted by it is widespread.

The Fiery Red Cover.

Of the 4th of July Double Number of The Youth's Companion, just received, is so realistic that one can almost hear the boom of the cannon cracker and the clang of the great Independence Bell. Some of the literary features are: "On His Own Merits," in which a spoiled son wins the battle of life through his own exertions; "Hitty," a boarding-school story by Kate W. Hamilton; "Under False Colors," an amusing story of life in a Western lumbering town; "A Little Hero of Lundy's Lane," "A Fourth of July Cow," by Helen M. North; "He Kept His Flag Up," by C. A. Stephens; "Fourth of July Under Difficulties," by James Parton. Besides these are the usual editorials on current events and a jolly page of 4th of July fun for the younger children.

Complete information.—"Mamma, what's twins?" asked the smallest child. "I know," replied the older one, before the mother could answer. "Twins are two babies just the same age; three babies are triplets, four are quadruplets, and five are centipedes."—[New York Sun.

THE POLICE SIGNAL SYSTEM.

THE TELEPHONE SERVICE SAID TO BE THE FINEST IN THE CITY.

The police signal system went into practical operation Wednesday, when the patrolmen used the "duty" calls for the first time. The system installed is that of the Gamewell Police and Fire Alarm company, whose factories are located in this city. A description of the system has been given in this paper, and many citizens were given an opportunity to inspect its working and the electrical apparatus at the exhibition given in City Hall several months ago. The plant includes a very handsome office desk, with necessary fixtures and battery, together with 20 street boxes, distributed throughout the city as follows: Ward 1, Centre, opposite Elmwood street; Washington, opposite Adams street; Watertown, opposite Chapel street; Ward 2, Central block, Walnut street; Ward 3, Waltham, corner Derby street; River, near Pine street; Washington, near Auburn street; Highland, corner Valentine street; Ward 4, Washington street, corner Woodland avenue; Washington, opposite Grove street, near Lower Falls; Auburn street, railroad bridge; Ward 5, Winter, corner Chestnut street; Oak street, near Gamewell factory; square at Newton Highlands; Walnut, corner Beacon street; Ward 6, Beacon, corner Centre street; Station, opposite Glen avenue; Hammond, corner Beacon street; Ward 7, Centre, corner Sargent street; Waverly avenue, corner Church street.

The box calls may be summarized as follows: duty calls, (3); fast and slow wagon, ambulance and telephone calls.

The telephone service is the best in the city and members of the police department state that it is the best in the State. The voice can be distinguished easily in the central station, talking from any of the street boxes, even when some distance from the transmitter. To illustrate the excellence of the telephone service, it may be stated that Capt. Davis at the central station easily distinguished a tune played by the Italian "musician," who stood some distance from the street box at Chestnut Hill. A further test may be cited, in which the central office hand telephone, connected with the suburban line, was placed against the transmitter of the police signal line and a conversation easily carried on between two gentlemen, one stationed at the suburban telephone in the Gamewell factory and the other at the police telephone in the street box, corner of Beacon and Walnut streets.

The general workmanship of the electrical apparatus is first-class in every detail, and the telegraphic machinery works very satisfactory, the calls being registered and the time stamped on the tape very clearly. The Gamewell company has fulfilled thoroughly the conditions of its contract, and the city possesses an excellent police signal system that will undoubtedly prove a valuable accessory in increasing the efficiency of the department.

The one great necessity is that of a well equipped police stable, and a suitable building will, undoubtedly, soon be erected. The patrol wagon, in charge of Officer Holmes, is at present located in Dr. Crockett's stable, near the Central station. It is a model police department wagon, thoroughly made, and reflecting credit upon the builder, P. A. McVicar. It is equipped with Concord axles and platform springs. The body and running gear is painted a dark blue, with handsome gold striping. Brass rails extend around either side, and the front and side seats are upholstered in leather. An adjustable, swinging lantern is arranged on the side under the driver's seat. The horse, a dapple gray, weighs 1180 lbs. and is a good roader.

In the near future more street boxes will be required. There is an urgent necessity for one at Waban, where now a patrolman is stationed, and where the needs of a growing community will soon demand recognition.

SCRIBNER'S Magazine for July has a very interesting illustrated article on Suburban homes, with valuable hints to builders. In Newton there has been a marked change of late years, and some handsome specimens of architecture have been erected in the different wards, the architects making their plans with careful reference to location and both interior and exterior attractiveness. One of the models of the moderate sized houses is Mr. Damon's new house on Hunnewell hill, which has a very attractive appearance, externally, and is very tasteful in design. Larger houses of quite as attractive appearance as any illustrated in the magazine are some of the new ones on Skinner Hill, and in that section of the city, while Mr. Henry E. Cobb's house is expected to prove when finished one of the handsomest architecturally in the city. Good specimens of model Suburban homes are also seen in the new village of Waban, and one might make a very interesting study of the great improvement in house-building by going about the different wards. There are some very good specimens remaining of the old Colonial houses some of which have been carefully remodelled as to preserve their best features, and from that down through the Mansard roof craze, which razed quite extensively in many sections of Newton, and which certainly gave the greatest amount of room for the size of the building. In one locality there was an outbreak of a modified form of Swiss villas, which is interesting as a sign of the groping toward beauty in house building, but among the newer houses there is great variety and evidence of a careful study of adaptation to location, which shows that they were built for homes and not merely in job lots. Indeed the contractors find, it is said, that the more carefully they plan the houses they build, the easier it is to find a customer, and the greater the profit that can be made. It is now the custom to secure a competent architect for every house, and the many architects give Newton a great variety of attractive homes. The square box order of architecture has evidently gone out of fashion here, even among the moderate priced houses, and some of the new ones that only cost $4,000 or $5

THE CITY GOVERNMENT.

CONTINUATION OF THE HEARING ON STREET RAILWAYS.

The board of aldermen met Monday night in special session to continue the hearing on the street railways that want a location between Newtonville, Newton Highlands and Newton Centre. All the members were present and Mayor Burr presided.

Mayor Burr announced the resignation of Mr. E. W. Cate, chairman of the water board, and nominated ex-Councilman E. T. Wiswall to fill the vacancy. The resignation was accepted and the appointment confirmed.

The following were appointed special policemen for July 3rd, 4th and 5th: P. O'Neil, Reuben Chapman, Thomas G. Prince, Chas. Tapley, F. T. Bartlett, Hiram B. Hartford, Robert W. Blue.

Alderman Johnson introduced an order for the acceptance of the police signal system recently installed by the Game-well Fire Alarm and Police Signal Company, and the order was passed unanimously.

An order was adopted, from the highway committee, requesting the Newton Street Railway Company to put up guard wires above and parallel to its trolley wire, the said wires to be No. 8 wire, and at least six feet apart. Another order was passed extending the time for opening of the railway until Aug. 1st, on account of the introduction of the order, in order that they should have reasonable time to comply with it.

Supt. Emerson sent in a communication from the school board asking that a city carpenter with a stated salary be appointed. Also asking that the second story of the Thompsonville schoolhouse be finished, to relieve the crowded condition of the Rice school; referred to public property committee.

Mr. McGuire gave notice of intention to build house 28 by 31 on Crafts street.

E. F. Melcher asked for concrete sidewalks on Norwood avenue.

Chas. Hunt asked for concrete walks on Tremont street and Waverley avenue.

F. B. Cutter asked for three street lamps on Chestnut street, Dr. Hitchcock and others for one on Hollis street, J. O. Smith and others for two on Fairbanks avenue.

Alderman Fenno from the street light committee introduced an order, which was passed, for one light on Walnut street near Lowell street, one incandescent light on Edinboro street, and three oil lamps on Evergreen avenue, Ward 4.

F. W. Gaffield gave notice of intention to build house 37 by 50 on Hunnewell avenue.

The dispute about poles on Newtonville square came up again, the order passed at the last meeting was rescinded, and an order passed for one electric light pole between the flag staff and the drinking fountain, one arm of which shall be used for the trolley wire support.

Alderman Fenno reported the draft of an ordinance, regulating the driving of cattle through the city, on Washington street from the Boston line to Park street; referred to ordinance committee.

STREET RAILWAY HEARING.

At 5 o'clock the street railway hearing was reopened.

Alderman Harbach read a remonstrance signed by Avery L. Rand, Alden Spence, Francis F. Langdon Ward, A. E. Ellis and a dozen other residents, property owners on Homer street, protesting against giving any street railway company a location on that street.

Mr. Rand was present and said that he was strongly opposed to having any railway on this street, but he had supposed that every one else favored it; learning that there was some opposition, only the night previous, he started out that morning and got the names of all the property owners between Centre and Pleasant streets, except those representing the estate of Benjamin Kingsbury, which was to be sold, and they thought the railway would aid to sell it; Mr. Hammett and Wm. Morton. The latter was one of the subscribers for stock on one street railway, and so did not sign the protest, although he said he was opposed to having the road on that street. The protest showed that the people who reside on Homer street do not want it, and that the ones who did were those having land to sell. The street was too narrow for a street railway, as it was only 31 feet between the curbs, there was a great deal of driving on the street, which a railway would interfere with, and a railway would also spoil it as a place of residence. The location from Willow to Homer would also be a dangerous place if a railway was put there, especially in icy weather.

MR. SAMUEL HOAR, counsel for the Boston & Albany Railroad Company, appeared to protest against any grade crossing at Newtonville, over the four tracks, and also at any place over the city road. Mr. Hoar argued that the railroad commissioners had refused to allow the Newton Street Railway Company to cross the Boston & Albany railroad at that point, and that it would be unjust for a municipality to grant such authority, especially as the request was made by a company desiring to evade the rule of the commissioners. The Newton board of aldermen, added Mr. Hoar, ought not to grant this right, unless a great public exigency demands it. Mr. Hoar said his company was willing to join with any parties to separate the grades and called attention to the new law, by which the railroad pays 65 per cent. of the expense, the town only 10 per cent. and the state the remainder. The danger of travel would be multiplied if a street railway were allowed to cross the railroad tracks. If the object was to build an experimental road, give it a location where there will be no grade crossings. In reply to Mr. Morse he admitted that the Newtonville crossing had been the first grade crossing for a street railway ever refused in the state, and that there were some 10 street railways crossing the Boston & Albany tracks at grade.

Mr. Geo. W. Morse said that when the Newton Street Railway charter had passed to its third reading in the legislature, Mr. Hoar or some one else got in a clause that the grade crossing matter must go before the railroad commissioners. He had no intention of evading the law, but this was a statute that contained a provision smuggled in at the last moment. He maintained that a grade crossing was rendered more safe by a street railway, as the conductors were added to the watchmen at the crossing, and helped to protect it. He submitted the report of the commission appointed by the legislature in 1889, and said it would take 50 years to abolish the grade crossings, and he thought no one at the hearing would live long enough to see the grades separated in Newton. The question was whether Newton people were going to let the Boston & Albany block all communications between the villages and prevent the building up of vacant land. He challenged Mr. Hoar to mention an accident where street railways crossed the road at grade, and said such crossings were safer than at crossings where there are no street railways.

Mr. Linus Child said he thought it would be better if the grades were separated, but Mr. Hoar exaggerated the danger. He had been counsel for street railways on the North side of Boston for 20 years, and in that time there had been no serious accident, although the crossings were numerous. The danger with the storage battery system was infinitesimal. His company had not applied to the legislature for a charter, so as to form a company without paying in a cent, but the company had been formed in the regular way and the capital stock paid in. The Boston & Albany had got all it wanted and it don't want anyone else to have anything.

Mr. Hoar said he had no antagonism to either company, and he would join with anyone to have the grades separated there or elsewhere in Newton. Twenty-five petitions for abolition of grades were presented last week. Mr. Hoar did not think the storage battery system was practicable and the overhead system he considered a nuisance.

This closed the grade crossing portion of the hearing, and the hearing on location was resumed.

Alderman Pettie presented a remonstrance signed by 57 tax-payers, against any in Newton Highlands.

Mr. W. H. Holbrook, who appeared last week, again protested against any location being granted to a road to run past his house.

Mr. W. B. Wood appeared and made a strong protest against the location on such a narrow street, and said no one wanted it past their houses; electric roads were dangerous, there were no fences in Newton to keep the children out of the streets, and there would be great danger.

Mr. E. Moulton said there was not one person a day that wanted to go from Newton Highlands to Newtonville, and as for High school children, it would not be long before a high school would be built on the south side of the city. He didn't know one person in the Highlands who wanted the road, which was bringing the hobby of a location into their quiet streets.

He had come to Newton for quiet and to get rid of the nuisance of horse ears, and he did not want them to pass his house.

Mr. Morse called attention to the fact that these protests were all against the route of the Garden City road, while three-fourths of the people in Newton had petitioned for his road, and only a few on Homer street protested.

Mr. W. B. Young said he was in favor of a street railway and three-fourths of the land owners and residents on Homer street wanted it. A large number of the residents had subscribed for stock. The Circuit road did not accommodate those who wished to go to Newton or Newtonville, it took half an hour, and cost about 20 cents to go to Newton from Newton Centre, and a street railway will carry people in about 15 minutes and for 5 cents.

He could have cured a long list of signers in the case of the street railway, and the road had been in the road by the best citizens. He was in favor of the Central, and in fact of any street railway.

Mr. Morse said the board should consider that they were not to establish a new grade crossing, but to use an old one, and street cars would be much more than crossing on foot. No one would oppose a line of busses, and there would be about as much chance of persons on a car being struck by a train, as of being struck by lightning. The hearing was held closed.

At the close of the hearing, Mr. Morse said he had heard concerning the relative to guard wires passed by the board. He was granted a hearing and stated that under the order it would be necessary, perhaps, to reconstruct the overhead system. Mr. H. W. Mansfield, of the Thompson-Houston Company, said that the conditions of the order would not decrease the danger to the public while it would necessitate putting up new brackets and possibly heavier poles. He said that it was intended to put guard wires where they were needed and in a manner which would provide for less danger in case of an accident than would have been the case if the railroad was compelled to follow the instructions incorporated in the order. A number of the accidents, he added, in the past, had resulted from the breaking of guard wires and not from the breaking of the trolley wire.

Hon. Linus M. Childs appeared in behalf of the Garden City Electric Street Railway Company and reviewed the questions of law involved in the rights of the Newton Street Railway Company to a location on Walnut street. After the Newton aldermen had granted a location to that company, said Mr. Childs, 18 months elapsed and work on the building of the road had not been commenced. In 1889 the Newton Street Railway Company became a corporation through the act of the legislature under the general law. It then remained for that company to come before this board for an approval of its location, as so long a time had elapsed since it was granted. This step has not been taken, hence that company has no rights so far as a location on Walnut street is concerned.

In regard to the storage battery system, you have been told that it does not work by representatives of the other company, but you also possess the proof that it is a success and that a street railway between Beverly and Danversport has been operated successfully and its storage battery cars run successfully on time for the past six months. The system does work and concerning that point, I desire to have a letter read from Hon. John L. Baker of Beverly. The letter was read by Mr. Huesis. It stated in substance that the storage battery railway in Beverly had been operated successfully for the past six months, to the universal satisfaction of its patrons.

At 10.15 o'clock, the aldermen took a recess. Upon reassembling, the order relating to guard wires was rescinded and a new order passed, requesting the Newton Street Railway Company to put up guard wires under the direction of the city engineer, at such points along the line of its route, as might be deemed necessary.

Cause of Summer Complaints.

The direct cause of pain and looseness of the bowels, is an irritation of the mucous membrane of the same, sufficient to produce excessive peristaltic or worm-like motion in the interior of the bowels, by which means the matter in the bowels is naturally carried through them. This excessive irritation causes more than a natural peristaltic action, and the partially digested food matter is kept constantly passing along and evacuated freely. This is called a diarrhea, where the irritation is enough to cause bleeding, we have dysentery. Indirect causes of diarrhea, by which an irritant is started are: intestinal dyspepsia, overeating, or overripe fruit, tainted meats, or oysters, etc.; torpor of liver, by which not enough bile is secreted; excessive flow of bile, etc. TREATMENT. Thoroughly evacuate the bowels with say, Parson's Pills, they are the best to get rid of all irritating matter. Then take Johnson's Anodyne Liniment in teaspoonful doses diluted with water every four hours, and often if the case is severe. In cases of Asiatic cholera one teaspoonful should be given every half-hour. Thousands of people remember the year 1849, when that worst known epidemic disease spread over this country. Johnson's Anodyne Liniment at that time was but little known outside of the state of Maine. In Bangor, Maine, the home of old Dr. Johnson, the Cholera got a firm hold—people dying in that small town at the rate of "thirty-six in one day."

Many old citizens of that place look back upon that wholesale death scene even to this late day, and they are not alone. In the line of Anodyne Liniment, is now in full vigor, and they feel that with it at hand, they cannot afford to neglect their family. It is a season of its use at that time by its friends, many would not now live to spread the joyful news that any case of diarrhea, dysentery, cholera morbus, cholera of children, etc., if taken in season, can be cured by Johnson's Anodyne Liniment. It never yet failed. No matter how well you know that medicine it will pay you to send to J. S. Johnson & Co., Boston, Mass., for a pamphlet free just to learn how to use the liniment economically. A teaspoonful properly used will often do more good than a half-bottle of some people use it.

THE NEWTON GRAPHIC HAS BEEN CONSOLIDATED WITH THE GRAPHIC

The street railway contest for a location on Walnut street is still going on, and at the hearing Monday night it was made evident enough that Newton Highlands does not care for any better means of communication with the centre of the city or any of the other villages. Ex-Mayor Hyde says there are only five men in the Highlands who really want the railway, and one of the witnesses testified that no people wanted even to go to Newtonville. Mr. Samuel Hoar enlarged upon the danger of grade crossings, and the opposing counsel rather cruelly challenged him to give a recent instance in this state of any accident from a street railway crossing the steam railroad tracks. They have evidently not been very numerous. No protests were received against granting a location through Walnut street in Newtonville, or through Homer street, except between Pleasant and Centre street. The street railway counsel argued that if there was any opposition it would have been heard from, and arguing from this a street railway seems to be desired between Newton Centre and Newtonville. The board of aldermen have a good many problems to solve, in this connection, and they have not as yet indicated what action they will take.

It is certainly rather curious of our state legislature, after reporting that they had found a good deal of corruption behind the West End bill, to then go ahead and endorse such corruption by passing the bill. This might be regarded as a notice that any parties interested in the passage of a bill should first secure the influence of the lobby, in order to have any chance of success, and that although the legislators have their own opinion of the lobby they will do what the lobby wishes. The attitude of the Boston Journal in regard to the matter is rather inconsistent, to say the least. After saying that "public opinion demands that the General Court takes some decisive step" towards regulating the lobby, which has been so actively employed for the West End bill, it says that "the members have not permitted themselves to be influenced by demagogic clamor" against the West End corporation. The curious reader would like to know just what enables an organ to see double with such adroitness. The "public demand" becomes "demagogic clamor" in almost the same paragraph.

ALTHOUGH it would seem from our local columns that all of Newton was away at the shore and mountains, yet the absentees are hardly noticed in the crowds that still travel to and fro on the trains, and fill the streets morning and evening. Very few of the houses about the city are closed, and the many advantages of Newton as a summer resort are so well known that almost as many come here for the summer as go away. Wherever Newton people go, they do not find more beautiful lawns or shadier streets, or more attractive piazzas, or indeed more enjoyment. They have the benefit of the change of air and scene, which seems to be a necessity of modern life, but in other respects most of them would prefer to remain at home, where the markets and stores furnish all the luxuries of the season and all modern conveniences are right at hand.

BISHOP POTTER is a very plain spoken man and his Phi Beta Kappa oration at Harvard caused a great fluttering among those political organs who think that no man has a right to express an honest opinion, unless he first obtains their consent. It is a very encouraging sign, however, that there are such men as Bishop Potter left, who are neither blinded by partisanship nor afraid to give their opinions. Freedom of speech is one of the foundations of our constitution, and even those who do not wholly agree with Bishop Potter, can not fail to admire his courage in boldly proclaiming his convictions. There are too few public leaders to-day who have any convictions to declare, or any principles which can not be changed according as popular favor seems to demand.

The Newton correspondent of the sensational Boston evening paper felt compelled to take back, after the exposure in last week's GRAPHIC, a good deal of his condemnation of the Newton police, and now thinks there have been ninety burglars in the last two years in Newton. Perhaps if he made it three years, and called every sort of petty theft a burglary, he would be somewhere near the truth, but the truth is the last thing the writer of sensational articles thinks of. It is certainly curious that any citizen who has a financial interest in the prosperity of Newton should think he can afford to do all that he can injure the city by writing such articles as he has for the Boston paper in question. Even the writer does not venture to print them in his local paper.

THE city auditor's annual report has been issued from the GRAPHIC office and is being distributed from City Hall, to those who desire to see where the city money goes to. It represents, in its two hundred pages, a vast amount of work for the auditor, who has had to put in a good many extra hours of work to get it out so much earlier than usual. Its stories are short, but they were very interesting to the different persons named. The city books are now all finished except two, and the copy for those is not yet ready for the printer. The city officials have been much pleased with the promptness with which these reports have been printed, none of them having to wait the thirty days which the contract allows the printer, and the work has been pronounced very satisfactory.

THE defeat of Henry Cabot Lodge for re-election as an overseer of Harvard College has naturally excited a good deal of comment, and it has also called Mr. Lodge's attention to the opinion entertained by his fellow graduates, of his course in politics, and his narrow and insincere criticism of the college. Mr. Lodge has cast in his lot with the politicians and he probably is willing to take the consequences. He has been successful in politics, and to those who only look at the results, he is greatly honored, but to those who consider that the means by which success is gained are to be scrutinized, Mr. Lodge has been a great disappointment, and it was to these latter that he owed his defeat.

THE report of the legislative investigating committee is a strong and able document, and fully vindicates Representative Williams for his demanding such an investigation. The charges made were too grave to be lightly dismissed, and the committee recognizes this and recommends legislation for the control of the lobby. Something certainly should be done, and public attention has been so forcibly called to the matter that the movement for biennial sessions ought to gain new strength. That would cut down by one half the power of the lobby for evil.

It may not be polite to look a gift horse in the face, but they do say that the Harrison gift cottage is three miles from Cape May, in a region swarming with mosquitoes, where cottages can not be rented for even $50 a season, and that Mrs. Harrison and Baby McKee have suffered such tortures from the insects that the former wishes to give back the cottage to the Philadelphia syndicate, believing that she has been cruelly deceived. The President, it is said, has hired a cottage at Cresson, Pa., and the gift cottage is soon to be left to the mosquitoes.

Gov. Brackett's veto of the gas and electric light consolidation bill is an admirably written document, and he shows that he is influenced by a proper regard for the rights of the people, which were threatened by this combination. The companies interested had too much capital stock for the amount of money that has been paid in, the Boston companies having an authorized capital of $12,000,000 and an actual capital of only $5,300,000.

THE BOSTON TRAVELLER of Wednesday evening said: "We may as well speak plainly: The enactment of the West End Elevated Railroad bill, tainted as it is with corrupt methods to secure such enactment can but endanger Republican success at the coming State election."

MAYOR BURR has issued the usual proclamation at this time of year, calling upon Constable Laffie to proceed to kill all unlicensed dogs, and also to report the names of all owners of unlicensed dogs, who will be proceeded against forthwith, according to law.

As Friday is the Fourth and a holiday, the GRAPHIC is printed this week on Thursday evening, and ought to be in the hands of its readers early Friday morning, that is, if they have time in the midst of their celebrations to visit the post offices and the news stands.

THE City Treasurer has sold the $50,000 30 year 4 per cent bonds, recently issued by the city, to Hayes & Sons of Boston, for 110.92. This is regarded as very satisfactory, and a rather emphatic endorsement of Newton's credit.

The ladies of the circle have not "helped to furnish a room" but from their ample fund and with gifts from interested members have fully and handsomely furnished room 60, one of the finest in the wing. At the dedication of this new wing, June 7th, room 60 was the most attractive, and the committee of arrangements felt proud of the result of time and thought bestowed.

—A dainty white volume, with "Alleluia" in pale green lettering across one corner of the cover, is the latest addition to the collection of the Newton Natural History society. The volume reveals the secret that "Alleluia" is the Annual—the first of—Lasell, prepared by the junior class. A portrait of Edward Lasell, the founder, and pictures of the Seminary as located in the present building, enhance, embellish this book, which reflects great credit upon the editor-in-chief and his assistants, and the business manager. The bright pages ripple with gossamer, and contain allusions and amusing drawings that will be appreciated by the students and alumni of the institution.

—An accident singularly without serious results happened Tuesday. Mrs. Ahl's team, from the hotel, was passing over the Walnut street bridge when the horse became frightened at the cars, threw out the occupants of the carriage, Mr. Royce and Miss Pomroy, and ran down Auburn street. The collision took place in connection with a team driven by Leslie Tinkham, near the boat house. The collision threw out young Tinkham and frightened his horse, which ran down the street for a few yards before it was captured. Mr. Pomroy was badly bruised, but the others were unhurt, though the vehicle suffered considerable damage.

—The petition for a writ of "mandamus" to compel the rector of the church of the Messiah to recognize certain parties as wardens who had been declared not elected at the parish meeting of April 7th, was granted, the court holding that both the old and new constitutions are in force, and that the old constitution must be signed by the old and new constitutions the same evening, and when he signed the new constitution his signature (in pen) was based from the old, by whom it is not known, but certainly with a fraudulent intent, as his name remains on the new constitution and every vote of his was counted, though for the opposition.

—The Auburndale church case, which has been before the Supreme court for some days, was decided on Monday by Judge Knowlton. In delivering his opinion he said that the order he was going to make would render it unnecessary to decide on many points that had been raised. The old constitution of the society was still in existence, in spite of the adoption of the new. It contained no clause providing for suicide, and so all changes that had been made to it were to be regarded as null and void, by whatever term they might be called. The provisions in the new constitution which were different from those in the old were merely amendments. Every body who signed the old constitution at the time of its adoption are still members, and the amendment provided by the new constitution requiring baptism as a qualification for membership does not apply to them. As it appears that the wardens asking for a writ of mandamus were elected by a majority of such legal voters, the petition is granted and a writ of mandamus ordered. The case will undoubtedly go to the full bench for its decision on questions of law.

—The bonhomie of the Newton Boat Club at Riverside was the scene of a fashionable gathering of society people, Saturday evening, upon the occasion of the grandiose concert and dance. The clubhouse grounds were illuminated with Japanese lanterns, also arranged about the verandas. In a secluded corner of the large hall Dow's orchestra was stationed and during the evening discourses were given for the merry dancers. The river proved a great attraction, and the early hours were enjoyed in the boats, from one of which colored lights were burned through the courtesy of Mr. Marble, during the moonlight trip toward Fox Island and return. Among those present at the festivities were Mr. Horatio Page, Conductor, Orlene, Mr. W. A. Hall, Mr. Morton Cobb, Miss Lucy Cobb, Mr. Wm. C. Brown, Mr. Chas. Brown, Miss Edith Page, Misses Page, Mr. and Mrs. A. S. Pratt, Mr. Geo. Eddy, Miss Markham, Mr. W. E. Stacy, Miss Thompson of New York, Mr. Chas. Richardson, Mr. Horace Soule, Mr. and Mrs. Harry Corey, Mr. Kirk Corey, Mr. Alvin Adams, Miss Agnes Chase, Mr. Arthur Howland,

Mr. Fred Harvey, Mr. Ed Spurr, Mr. and Mrs. H. Sprague, Mr. J. Wallace, Gov. Rich, Mr. Will Coffin, Mr. Harry Nowell, Miss Fitch, Miss Cora Stewart, Miss Grant, Mr. Walter Lawson, Dr. and Mrs. Bartlett, Mr. and Mrs. H. W. Turner, Mr. Thomas Hall, Mr. and Mrs. Ellery Peabody, Mr. Edward Elms, Mr. Walter H. Holbrook, Mr. and Mrs. H. S. Pearson, Mr. W. M. Lawrie, Miss Hutchinson. The series of concerts have proved a great attraction and the social features of the club are becoming each season more popular, an incentive, no doubt, to a largely increased membership. At a meeting of the club, Tuesday evening, it was voted to increase the membership of the club from 200 to 250, thus giving an opportunity to a large number on the waiting list to join at once.

The Superintendent of Schools.

To the Editor of the GRAPHIC:
Many of us were much interested in your communication on the resignation of Mr. Emerson last week, and emphatically endorse your position. The school board have now a grand opportunity to settle the whole vexatious school question, that has been troubling the city for years, and we hope they will have sense enough to see it. Mr. Emerson has resigned and wishes to retire. Why not let him do so, and by securing a new man see if harmony can not once more be restored, and the unhappy division of opinion existing be done away with. Mr. Emerson has received a very handsome endorsement from the teachers and from his friends on the school board, and why not let the matter end here, secure a new man and satisfy everybody. Every true friend of our schools must desire harmony, and the best interest of the school would be served by introducing a new man and new methods, on the principle that a new broom sweeps clean. The school board ought not to fear that they will be left as "desolate orphans," for the parents of the children throughout the city will be mothers and fathers to them, and would be willing to accept and guide their faltering steps until they are able to walk alone. Such are the sentiments of MANY PARENTS.

Protect Yourself.

Under this heading H. E. Johnson has issued a circular, for all who use the telephone or electric lights, by using Brown's Electric Protector, which is used by the Gamewell Fire Alarm Co. and many railroads, and is endorsed by the Philadelphia fire experts and others. He will explain its workings to all who desire protection and it can be seen in operation at his store in Howes' block.

An Old Trick is a New Dress.

Street fakirs have been reaping a big harvest from the sale of little glass vials like those used to hold homeopathic pellets. The vials cost at wholesale a fraction of a cent apiece, and the fakirs have been retelling them for five cents each. Their value as a street hawk's novelty consists in the fact that a remarkably funny practical joke can be played with them. Each of the little bottles now being sold in the streets has a small hole drilled or blown in the bottom. When filled with water and corked tightly the vial will apparently be perfectly sound. The water will not escape from the little hole in the bottom of the vial until the cork is withdrawn from the other end. As soon as the cork is pulled out, however, the water will run out of the little hole.

The joke consists in offering a filled and corked bottle to the chosen victim with the question, "Can you tell me what that perfume is in that bottle?" At first the victim attempts to smell it through the cork. Failing to perceive any odor in this way he naturally withdraws the cork, and the chances are about twenty to one that the contents of the bottle trickle down his coat sleeve and wet his arm to the elbow. Then the perpetrator of the joke laughs fiendishly and the victim says: "By Jove, that is the best thing I've seen yet! Where can I get one?" The trick is an old one, but it has probably never been sold before. —New York Sun.

Turned Up Trousers.

It seems to be raining in London a great deal nowadays. All the young swells, and some who are old enough to know better, go about in Cambridge and Brookline, and even in Boston, with their trousers turned away up around the bottom; and this whether the weather is wet or dry, or whether they are walking upon the grass or upon the driest of sidewalks. The trousers are simply to be turned up at the bottom, and that is all there is of it. Even the tailors and the furriers, when they expose the goods for sale, exhibit them with the bottoms turned up.

The turning up is done in an artfully careless way, and one begins to suspect that there is a secret about it that only the born swell knows, so that the improperly turned up trousers betray the spurious article of swell. The trousers are actually made long enough to lie upon the ground, so that when they are turned up the edge will descend to the ankle. This merely moderately amusing fashion has no particular interest, but it has occurred to me that it will be an interesting item in the twenty-fourth or fifth century to the sociological student of the curious customs of the present period. —Boston Transcript.

The Lightning Rod Season.

Now is the time for inhabitants of the rural districts to conjure up the annual thunder storm scare and invoke the shade of Ben Franklin by converting houses and barns into the semblance of colossal metallic porcupines. Scolding neighbors console them with jeers, but perhaps erect wooden rods to scare away that "hardy perennial," the lightning rod agent. Something is to be said on both sides of the question. It is quite certain that a well grounded network of conductors will avert to a very great extent danger from lightning, but it is extremely likely that the same result is not attainable by the average rod that thrusts its point a few inches above the chimney top. It is well to remember that a few tall trees around a house form a very efficient and artistic system that is always well grounded and never needs overhauling. —Electrical World.

Tried by Wild Geese.

Irwin W. Bossler, of Blandon, while fishing in the Maiden creek, was attacked in the middle of the stream, when one of the geese suddenly flopped upon him, knocked off his hat and sent his rod and line flying into the water. As Bossler grabbed for his hat he received a blow which almost broke his arm and sent him sprawling upon his back. He waded out, but had no sooner reached the bank when another goose attacked him and dealt him such severe blows that he was compelled to retreat. He finally crawled up a tree, where he was rescued completely exhausted. —Philadelphia Telegraph.

Sleeping Passengers Saved by a Dream.

J. J. Tilford, an employee of the Louisville, St. Louis and Texas railroad at Havesville, dreamed Friday night that the west end of the switch at that place had been left open for the side track, and that the fast freight train was nearly due. At this point he woke up, and was so impressed by his dream that he got up and went to investigate. To his surprise he found the switch set for the side track. He set it right, thus saving many lives. There were sixty men sleeping in the cars that were then lying on the side tracks. He also saved the company thousands of dollars' worth of property. —Louisville Courier Journal.

A little 3-year-old daughter of James McNamara was the victim of a peculiar accident at Butte, Mont., recently. The child was walking on the sidewalk opposite the old Lexington foundry, when a severe gust of wind blew her bodily into the street, about ten feet below. The shock broke her arm, and she also received other injuries. A suit for damages will probably be brought against the city by the parents of the little one.

A 150 pound turtle was delivered at Thomas Cable's Broadway cafe, New York city, and the chef sharpened his carver and cut it open. A huge nest of golden eggs was brought to view. It took Thomas Jordan, brother of Conrad N., twenty minutes to count the eggs. There were 1,620 eggs.

A novel method of plowing was that recently adopted by a colored man in North Carolina. His steer refused to work when hitched to the plow, and thereupon he hitched it to a cart and fastened the plow behind the cart. He proceeded to plow with the steer without any further trouble.

Saved by a Bravo Engineer.

As Frank Repp, the engineer of the Perfection train which reaches Allentown early in the morning, looked out of his cab window on his morning trip June 2 he saw a beautiful young woman approaching on the track. He whistled an alarm, and she stepped lightly and gayly off the track his train was traveling to the other track.

But it was evident to the engineer that the noise of his train had drowned the roar of another train approaching from behind her in the opposite direction, and that she was unaware of her peril. He noted the several puffs of white smoke that swiftly arose from the locomotive bearing down upon her, but she evidently heard not the whistle's frequent warning of danger. Repp saw her death was certain unless he could in some way attract her attention to her peril. He waved his hand to her warningly, but she evidently misunderstood its meaning, for she slackened her pace, looking at him more earnestly.

He immediately reversed the lever and turned on the steam brakes with a suddenness that alarmed the passengers. He sprang to the side door of the cab, and before his locomotive had come to a standstill he leaped to the opposite track just as his engine got abreast of the young woman and the other locomotive had almost reached her.

With herculean strength and lightning swiftness he caught her up bodily and leaped with her beyond the tracks just as the other engine swept by. He sank to the ground, overcome by the effort and the narrowness of their escape. The passengers were loud in their praises of his heroic conduct, and the young woman was almost prostrated with shock, while overcome with gratitude at the noble conduct of her rescuer. —Cor. Philadelphia Inquirer.

The Twenty-four Hour Time System.

The twenty-four hour system is likely to come before many years. According to the inquiries of a committee of the American Society of Civil Engineers, it appears that no less than 384 officers, presidents, superintendents, engineers, etc., representing fully 135,000 miles of railroad, expressed themselves in favor of the change. The report says that in all between 500 and 600 prominent men in every section of the country have answered the committee's questions on the subject, and of these only an extremely small percentage have opposed the change. During 1889, 237 replies were received, of which 220 were favorable and 17 unfavorable. As to the time of making the change, 27 of the 230 persons who gave a favorable answer named 1892, while 68 chose 1891, and 91 favored 1890. There were 30 who gave no time, and the report suggests that these would go with the majority and make a heavy preponderance of opinion in favor of a time not later than 1891. —New York Telegram.

A Mean Woman.

One of the most contemptible persons in New York is the woman who is seen daily in Madison or Union square park, and who evades the law which forbids dogs being permitted to run at large. She ties her dog to a rope long enough to do duty as a clothes line for a good sized family wash. When the policeman is at the other end of the park she "pays out" rope until the dog can reach the flower beds, where he enjoys himself to his heart's content in scratching at the roots of the flowers planted at the expense of the taxpayers for the delectation of visitors to the squares. When she sees the policeman coming toward her, this most aesthetic woman hauls in slack till the cord is pulled on the walk. I am certain that even Zury, the meanest man in Spring county, would be envious of the superlative meanness of this well dressed and evidently well fed New York woman. —Epoch.

Parliament Houses Crumbling.

The British parliament houses are crumbling to pieces so fast that there is constant danger of some portion of the buildings toppling down on the members. Parts of the front of St. Stephen's have had to be entirely refaced because of the wearing away of the soft stone. Only a week or two ago a heavy piece of a stone heraldic animal suddenly fell close to the entrance to Westminster hall in Old Palace yard—a means of entrance to the house which is largely favored. But a few days before a portion of the ornamental stonework fell close to the members' entrance itself, and another heavy piece fell on the pavement of New Palace yard not a month ago. —Chicago Tribune.

Caught Up by the Locomotive Pilot.

Judge Sterling Watts, one of the most prominent citizens of Tazewell county, Va., had a most miraculous escape from a terrible death a few days ago. He was riding a very wild young horse near the depot when the train came in sight. This so frightened the horse that he became frantic and jumped before the advancing engine, and was caught up on the pilot and carried some seventy-five yards before the engine could be stopped. Judge Watts was unhurt, but the two hind legs of the horse were broken and he had to be shot. —Richmond Dispatch.

Robbie Expected A Long Summer.

Robbie's mother had noticed that every time he went out into the street with her he carried a mounted every dog in sight. As the number increased Robbie grew depressed, and when he reached his 200th dog he sighed wearily: "Mamma, I am afraid there won't be any winters any more."

"Why, Robbie, what makes you think so?" "Every dog has his day doesn't he?" "Oh, some people say so." "But it's true isn't it?" "I suppose so."

"Well, then, if every dog takes a day, dogdays will last till Christmas, and I shall be just as hot and sticky all the time." And Robbie refused to be comforted.

Indigestion

It is not only a distressing complaint, of itself, but by causing the blood to become impure and the system enfeebled, is the parent of innumerable maladies. That Ayer's Sarsaparilla is the best cure for indigestion, even when complicated with liver complaint, is proved by the following testimony from Mrs. Joseph Lake, of Brockway Centre, Mich.: "Liver complaint and indigestion made my life a burden and came near ending my existence. For many years I suffered untold agony, was reduced almost to a skeleton, and hardly had strength to drag myself about. All kinds of food distressed me, and only the most delicate could be digested at all. Within the time mentioned several physicians treated me without giving relief. Nothing that I took seemed to do any permanent good until I commenced the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla, which has produced wonderful results. Soon after commencing to take the Sarsaparilla I could see improvement in my condition. My appetite began to return, and with it came the ability to digest all the food taken, my strength improved each day, and after a few months of faithful attention to your directions, I found myself a well woman, able to attend to all household duties. The medicine has given me a new lease of life."

A patrol box similar to those used by the company in their large city contracts has also been put up this week connected by wires, and in perfect working order, which will keep as a sample for the inspection of customers, the structure even being kept lighted each night by the lantern at the top.

THE CITY GOVERNMENT.

THE ALDERMEN HAVE LONG AND TEDI-OUS HEARINGS.

Both branches of the city council met Monday night, and the board of aldermen had a midnight session, in consequence of the River street railway tracks hearing, and the hearing over the rendering establishment on California street. All the members were present, and as Mayor Burr was absent Alderman Pettie occupied the chair.

The quarterly report of the chief of fire department was received. In the three months ending June 30th, the fire department had been called out 14 times and there was a loss of $5,475 on buildings and $2,870 on personal property. The time of service was 84 hours and 25 minutes.

J. J. Fitzgerald gave notice of intention to build house 28 by 30 on Lincoln court, and A. O'Neill one 28 by 36 on Webster street.

N. B. Smith asked for license to erect a boarding stable on Brook street, Ward Seven, 40 by 50; referred to license committee.

Hugh Monaghan and John Morgan were granted a license to build a stable 18 by 25 on Jewett street.

Residents of Eliot avenue asked to have that street laid out and accepted, to be of the width of 40 feet, and also asked to have their sidewalks graded and concreted.

W. B. Young and 40 others asked the board to grant a location to a street railway between Newtonville and Newton Centre. At the request of Alderman Bond the names of the petitioners were read. Robert R. Lowell and 60 others also made the same request. On the list were the names of the two councilmen of the ward, and some of the most prominent citizens, including Horace Cousins, Robert Hawthorne, E. F. Melcher, E. T. Colburn, Loring L. Brooks, A. D. S. Bell, Joshua Loring, Henry Ross, Chas. W. Ross and a majority of the residents and property owners on Homer street, and the streets running from it.

H. F. Ross was granted license to build addition to his mill on Crafts street.

Chas. W. Loring was granted a license to erect an addition to barn on Park street, 17 by 32, to be used for a carriage house.

The Gamewell Fire Alarm and Telegraph company were granted permission to water Oak and Chestnut streets, near their factory, the city to furnish water at the rate of 12 cents per thousand gallons.

Residents of Park Place, Ward 2, asked the board to abate a nuisance in a stable owned by Mrs. Lang, which was filthy and a common nuisance, the stable being used for the storage of petroleum; referred to license committee.

THE MEMORIAL HALL.

The joint special committee on the proposed Memorial Hall, reported progress, and in view of the varying opinions in regard to having the city contribute half the cost, asked for a hearing before both branches of the city government, next Monday evening at 8 o'clock. The request was granted.

Sidewalks were ordered concreted on Eliot street, past the estate of Simeon Foster.

The Garden City street railway company withdrew its application for a location through Newton Highlands, on account of the objections made, and said they would accept any location between Newtonville and Newton Centre, and if they were given a route through Homer street, they should ask for a spur track to the cemetery gates.

The water board were authorized to lay 704 feet of 6 inch pipe on Auburndale avenue, at a cost of $761, 800 feet of 10 inch pipe on Carlton road, and 525 feet of 6 inch pipe on Mossfield road, the guarantee on the 10 inch pipe to be based on the cost of 6 inch pipe, at a total cost of $2,735.

RIVER STREET RAILWAY TRACKS.

Alderman Fennie read a communication from M. Taffie and 15 others who had signed the petition, asking to have the railway tracks placed in the middle of the street, stating that they had signed the petition under a misapprehension as to the bed of the railway, and withdrawing their names from the petition.

Geo. M. Cox asked to have the first petition read, which contained 43 names, and said the last three names out of the 15 were not on the first petition. The railway was dangerous on the side, he said, and would be less dangerous in the middle of the street. One child had been killed by the horse railway, and an electric railway would be much more dangerous. The railroad men as soon as they heard of the petition put on a large force of men, and re-laid the tracks on the side of the street.

Mr. M. Ryan said the tracks were within 4 feet of the fences, and Patrick Kenner said the snow was always shoveled from the tracks against his door, and kept his cellar full of water.

James Walsh said there were 27 houses on that side of the street, and they had no sidewalk. The trolley poles were placed within 8 inches of the cars and some one would be sure to be hurt.

Policeman John Ryan made a clear and straight forward plea for the removal of the tracks. For 30 years he had lived on the street and he and his father were tax-payers. He had 300 feet of land there, and he had been prevented from selling it because the tracks were on the side, and teams could not stop in front of it. The superintendent of the road had been notified of the petition, and instead of waiting he had put on a large force of men and re-laid the tracks as fast as he could, to get ahead of the petitioners. On Elm street they concreted the driveways into private grounds, but not on River street. The road was covered with crushed stone, which made it rough and uneven. The people on the street had no fences, their houses were close to the street and their children would be in great danger. There was a rumor that the men who had withdrawn their names from the petition had secured many loads of gravel to spread on their places, without cost. When asked if he had not got some gravel, he said that he had; he had bargained for it at 10 cents a load, but they had not yet come for the money. The road ought to be in the middle of the street, for the safety of the people.

Thomas F. Maguire said he was probably the largest tax-payer on the street, and he favored having the tracks moved. They were now close up to what ought to be the sidewalk, flowed up the gutter so that the water filled on to the walk and the land. No team could stop on that side of the road, and the people living there should have their rights protected. The walks were in places 15 inches from the tracks. Four-fifths of the taxpayers favored removal. He did more teaming than anyone on the street, and the road would be better and safer with the tracks in the middle.

John Haley and B. F. Ryan also spoke in favor of having the tracks moved. They then closed their case, and Mr. Dickinson of Boston, one of the directors of the road, spoke against removal, on account of the great expense involved to the road. The road was acting under orders of the board of aldermen in relaying its tracks, and was hurrying matters to comply with those orders. There was less danger, he contended, from electric cars than horse cars, as the electric cars could be stopped in half their length, and so no danger of any one being injured from in front. He had charge of the West End cases, and there was only one instance of injury from in front, that of Mr. Bradford, which was due to his horse being balky. The roadway was better if tracks were on the side, and all tracks he thought should be on the side of the street, and at some time would be ordered there. They were so placed in Plymouth and Quincy. He was rapidly cross-examined by Messrs. Maguire, Ryan and others, much to the enjoyment of the spectators.

Michael Taffie was next called by President Morse, and argued in favor of the tracks being left on the side. He admitted having had a lot of gravel from the railway company, but he let them keep it as long as it was a favor, as it was an easy way for them to get rid of it. The road bed was never as good as now, and he thought there was no danger to children. He was also cross-examined by Mr. Maguire pretty sharply.

Michael McEnany also spoke in favor of the tracks being left on the side.

President Morse made the closing argument, and said only 3 of the men who lived on the side of the tracks had appeared in favor of the petition. There were only 19 houses instead of 28 on the side, and Mr. Taffie spoke for a majority of the houses. He was matter of factness to the company the tracks ought not to be ordered removed. They were relaid in accordance with the orders of the board of aldermen and superintended by the chairman of the highway committee, the superintendent of streets and the city engineer, and the company had to hasten to get them done in time. In reply to Alderman Johnson he said the Newton company bought the road last August, began the relaying of the tracks in April and strained every nerve to get through by June 1st. Suppose they waited till now for this petition, the company would have been harshly criticized for its delay, and they were even now accused of being too slow. The road was a model of construction and he expected all tracks to be ordered on the side of the street. In reply to Alderman Johnson he said the company got their location on Washington street 3 years ago, but they did nothing at the time, and now they are asking to be allowed to cross the B. & A. tracks blocked them. After Mr. Morse had been cross-examined by the River streeters at some length, he was let off, and the long hearing was closed at nearly 11 o'clock.

THE RENDERING ESTABLISHMENT

on California street next came up for a hearing. Rev. Mr. Lamb presented the case of the Stevens Brothers who ask for a license, and Mr. J. B. Goodrich appeared for the remonstrants, who are mostly Watertown residents, having houses across the river. Mr. Lamb said the rendering would be done in the cleanest way possible and great care taken to prevent any odors. The Stevens Brothers were worthy young men, who worked for Mr. Jenkinson and wanted to obtain an honest living.

Mr. Goodrich said the place was once closed up by the board of health, was a nuisance, and was now open contrary to law, making the parties liable to a fine of $20 a month.

Messrs. Robbins, Derby, Thomas, Keith and Ingraham of Watertown appeared to protest, and testified that they were rendered unhappy by the odors.

Mr. Lamb said the place had been whitewashed, Mr. Keith replied that a skunk would smell just as bad, even if you whitewash him.

Mr. Lamb suggested that the smells came from the low lands of the river, covered with filth from the dye houses, starch factories, and other factories which empty refuse in the river, and the smell from which is terrible when the tide is low.

Mr. Ingraham said that Watertown had just closed a similar place, and did not want to have another opened on its borders.

One of the Stevens brothers appeared and testified in regard to the way the place was to be carried on and the house grease rendered.

Mr. Lamb also called on Agent French of the board of health, who testified in regard to the place, after which the hearing was closed.

After the hearing the board took a recess. Upon re-assembling, Alderman Johnson for the committee on licenses, reported have to withdraw on the petition of the Newton Street Railway Company to keep two horses in its stables on Washington street; also on the petition of Stevens Bros., for permit to conduct a rendering establishment on California street.

On motion of Alderman Fennie, the city clerk was authorized to advertise the hearing on the proposed Memorial building in the local papers.

On motion of Alderman Bond, it was voted that when the board adjourned it be to meet again Monday evening next. Papers from the Common Council were acted upon, the city clerk at the request of the chairman reading the mayor's veto accompanying the order appropriating $75 for the reimbursement of citizens for sums expended for a temporary bridge at Newton Lower Falls.

Alderman Johnson said that he approved of the mayor's motive in vetoing the order, but that he had learned from Dr. Crehore that it was understood by him and others that sums expended for this purpose would be paid back by the city. The town of Wellesley has paid its part and it seems to me that Newton can afford to do so, especially as there was evidently a misunderstanding in the matter on the part of citizens who contributed the amounts which this order is intended to cover.

Alderman Harbach said that the petitioners had received all they asked for in the first place, having been granted an appropriation of $150. Nothing was said about paying any more money at the time and I cannot see what right they have to come forward now asking for an additional sum.

Alderman Pettie thought the mayor's point in comparing the case of the playground at Newton Centre to the matter under discussion was not well taken. In the latter case, a highway had been obstructed by the detriment of citizens.

It had taken a long time to complete the bridge and the people at the Lower Falls had suffered considerable inconvenience. I think I should have voted for a temporary bridge, in the first place had I known so much time would have elapsed before the completion of the permanent bridge, continued the aldermen, and I feel, therefore, that the citizens should be reimbursed for the sums which they have expended.

The order was finally passed over the mayor's veto in concurrence by the necessary two-thirds vote—Yeas, Aldermen Pettie, Johnson, Bond and Fennie; Nays, Aldermen Harbach and Coffin; absent, Alderman Hamblen.

The board adjourned shortly after midnight.

Common Council.

In the Common Council a large amount of concurrent business was transacted. The veto of the mayor accompanying the order returned, providing for the reimbursement of citizens for sums expended for a temporary bridge at Lower Falls, brought out some discussion.

Councilman Crehore stated that the citizens understood that they were to be reimbursed the amounts expended for that purpose. The mayor has stated, continued Councilman Crehore, that in his opinion, it was the duty of the city in the first place to provide for a temporary bridge, as the main thoroughfare during the time occupied in the building of the permanent bridge, was practically destroyed. The town of Wellesley had acknowledged its obligation in this particular case, and there seems to be no good reason why Newton should refuse to pay its part.

Councilman Dutch asked if the amount contributed by citizens had not been utilized in making the temporary bridge safe for travel?

Councilman Crehore replied that it had and the original sum appropriated was insufficient to put the bridge into proper condition.

Councilman Bates moved the passage of the original order and it was passed over the mayor's veto, 13 yeas, 1 absent. The order accepting the Gamewell police signal system was passed unanimously in concurrence.

On motion of Councilman Fornkall, it was voted to concur with the alderman in referring the order providing for an appropriation for a fire alarm striker at Nonantum, to the committee on finance.

A petition from Hon. William Claflin, presented by Councilman Bates, requesting that Marshall street be extended to Grant avenue, was referred to the committee on highways.

A man by the name of Stephen Hull called at the post office several times for an important business letter he expected, and each time was assured by the intelligent official that there was not any for him. Finally, becoming exasperated, he asked if there were any for a person by the name of "Hull." "Oh, yes," said the postmaster, "we have one here for Stephen Hull, but none for Steven."

THE STREET RAILWAY.

There were some strong petitions presented in the city council Monday night, in favor of a street railway between Newtonville and Newton Centre, and the names on the petitions included some of the largest tax-payers and most enterprising residents of Ward Six, which would reap especial benefit from a street railway. It is evident, that whichever road gets the location, if either of them do, the route will be through Walnut and Homer streets to Newton Centre, and the land owners on the route are probably correct in expecting that the road would largely increase the population of the city and result in new houses being built all along the route.

The street railways are becoming more and more a public necessity, and our readers would probably be surprised at the large number of Newton people who go to Oak Square to take the electric cars to Boston. If the road was extended to Newton the number would be largely increased.

It was not long ago that the residents on Waverley avenue almost unanimously asked the West End road to extend their tracks through Chestnut Hill and down that thoroughfare, and the time will probably come when this will be done, although just at present the West End company are more intent on developing their own land schemes than of assisting those of others, and the difficulties in the way of motive power will probably prevent much extension until further inventions are made. If it could only be proved that storage batteries were the success that is claimed for them, the overhead system would be ordered out of every city in the land in short order, as it is confessed to be a nuisance, even by those who have adopted it.

What the board of aldermen will do is uncertain. Some of the members are opposed to having any street railways in Newton, and in this they are encouraged even by some of the stockholders in the proposed roads. It is said that one stockholder has even said he would give a check of $5,000 to any one who would prevent a street railway going through his street. On the other hand one or two of the aldermen are firm in the belief that street railways are needed for the development of Newton, and that a road between any two of the villages would prove of great value to the city in the way of increasing the valuation by bringing desirable residents here. Between these two extremes are the members who are non-committal, and on them depends the fate of the present petitioners, although street railways are sure to come in time.

THE MEMORIAL HALL.

There will be a hearing next Monday evening, before both branches of the city council, on the scheme to build a Memorial Hall, the city to pay half the cost, and to have the use of part of it for a drill shed for the High School Battalion, and some say for an armory, to take the place of Armory Hall. The latter project could hardly be carried out, as the state has the control of all buildings used as armories, and this hardly fits in with the object of the building.

The special committee who have been considering the project are unable to agree as to recommending that the city should pay half the cost, which is to be $60,000 or $75,000, exclusive of the land. Some of the members of the city council who are on the special committee think that in view of all the extra expenses to be put in the tax levy this year, some $32,000, and the debt incurred for the extension of the water works, which is up in the hundred thousand, that it would not be wise to add anything more to the already rather heavy taxes in Newton.

Other members on the committee are very enthusiastic in favor of the project, and think that the city can well afford to pay half, if the rest is raised by private subscription, and they think Newton should do anything for the veterans, to show its gratitude for their services.

It is unfortunate that the hearing should be had right in the midst of the summer vacation, when so many of the citizens are away, and when the attendance would naturally be light. However, it is not probable, and neither is it advisable, that hasty action will be taken, and the whole matter can very well be laid over until fall, when there will be plenty of time to consider it. There is no immediate hurry, and the question of appropriating so much money should not be decided upon in a moment. Newton has so far been generous in its treatment of the veterans, and their appeals have never been disregarded, no matter what was the subject, whether it was a soldiers' monument, a soldiers' lot in the cemetery, appropriations for Memorial Day, or raising a fund for the Charles Ward Post. Even if it should be decided that it is best to build the hall entirely by private subscriptions, those will not be lacking, for Newton people are generous, and there are very many who could better afford to give half of the sum required, than the city could afford to make its tax rate burdensome on the people of moderate means. The question will probably be fully considered at the hearing, and those who advocate the hall will be present to urge their side of the case.

PURIFYING POLITICS.

The Springfield Republican has printed a series of interviews with prominent thinkers in regard to purifying our politics, and Rev. Dr. Washington Gladden in his vigorous fashion begins by saying that the first step has already been taken by the civil service reform laws, unhappily not always administered by the friends of the reform, "but even in the hands of its enemies its restraints have not been completely overridden, and its principle has been abundantly justified. No better reason can be found for supporting this measure than that which is drawn from the character of the men who are clamoring for its repeal. One who lives at any of the centers of politics, and who carefully observes the political conduct of that class of politicians to whom this reform is particularly obnoxious, will be convinced that the law deserves our love for the enemies it has made. And there was never greater need of united, resolute, relentless advocacy of this particular reform than in this second year of the administration of Benjamin Harrison. The next step in the purification of politics should be the adoption of the Australian system of balloting. A more important measure still is a law requiring every candidate and every political committee to publish a sworn and itemized statement of all moneys collected and expended for election purposes. To say that we cannot enforce a law like this is to say that the foundations of our government are already undermined. The bestowment of favors or gratuities upon public officials, by parties in interest before them, and the acceptance of the same by such officials, are acts already illegal in most if not in all the states; but in spite of the law this scandal is constantly perpetrated. The acceptance of a railway pass by a state legislator is an indecent and infamous act. No honest legislation can be looked for from men who will take such favors. It would be wholesome if voters would always interrogate candidates for the Legislature upon this subject, requiring of them express declarations of their purposes. The invasion of our Legislatures by the money power is one of the great sources of political corruption; and voters are bound to keep vigilant eyes upon their representatives, and to exact a strict account from them.

THE NEW YORK TRIBUNE has surprised everyone by coming out against a further extension of the pension list, and as the Tribune is an organ, and never takes a position without the advice and sanction of the party leaders, its position is the more remarked upon. It speaks about other people being taxed "to fill the pockets" of veterans who are able to support themselves. There will now be on the pension rolls, continues the Tribune, some 750,000 persons who will each receive on an average $224 a year, or in all $168,000,000—which exceeds by $18,000,000 the estimates we have made of the minimum expense of existing pension laws. If the population be placed at 66,000,000, about one person in 88 of the population receives a pension, and this is the striking fact to which the Tribune calls attention. "Out of all the money raised by customs, internal taxes and miscellaneous receipts for the benefit of all the people, nearly half is paid over to one eighty-eight of the people, and little more than one-half is expended for all other national purposes." And it goes on to say that "a voting population of 12,000,000 will not consent to pay more than half the entire revenues of the government to a twentieth of their number," and warning is served upon the "pension attorneys and lobbyists" and others demanding more largesses for the soldiers, that "further appropriations cannot be asked without imperiling the continuance of all grants for that object."

The death of Mr. Willard Marcy is a great loss to Newton, where his home has been for so many years, and in whose prosperity he was so deeply interested. Mr. Marcy was a representative of the older class of citizens, whose upright character and sincerity have commanded the respect of all, and who have made Newton known all over the state. He had the old fashioned qualities of honesty and straight-forwardness, and even in politics his influence was never given to any questionable methods. Here presented the Republicanism of Wilson, Sumner, and the other great men of the state and nation, when character counted for so much in politics. In addition he had plenty of shrewdness and great common sense, and was a most interesting companion. He never sought office, but was always ready to do his duty, and he will be greatly missed, not only at his home in Upper Falls, but by friends in all parts of the city.

THERE is a good deal of interest felt in the size of the tax rate this year, in view of the numerous extra expenses that have come up so far, the extra interest for water bonds, the new school buildings, etc. It is probable that the rate will not be below $15, if it is not in excess of that. The prosperity of Newton depends in great measure on keeping the tax rate within moderate limits, as it will not do to frighten away people by having a rate much in excess of other suburban cities. Fifteen dollars is certainly about as high as it is safe to go, under the present valuation of city property, and although there has been an unusually large increase in the valuation this year, the expenses have fully kept pace with it.

AN amusing feature of the River street hearing, Monday night, was to see the lawyers cross-examined and made uncomfortable by the laymen from River street. It is generally the other way, and laymen are turned inside out by the legal counsel, so that the change pleased all who have ever been on the witness stand and been badgered by a member of the legal fraternity. The River street delegates enjoyed it so much that they were willing to keep the hearing going all night long, in spite of the sufferings of the aldermen, who had hard work keeping the hearing within any kind of limits.

THE American Economist tries to disprove that our manufacturers give extra discount for export, and quotes the manager of a small cutlery concern down in Connecticut, who says that his company never gives greater discount for foreign than for home trade. Now if the Economist would prove that this concern ever sold any cutlery to be exported, it would have given some force to its statement. If the manager quoted would devote half the time to the improvement of his goods, that he gives to lobbying at Washington for higher duties, he would not have so much cause to fear foreign competition.

THE Republican Ward and City Committee will take action on the adoption of the Australian ballot system for all caucuses, at their meeting Saturday evening. There is little doubt but this excellent reform measure will be introduced here, and it will be a great improvement on the usual method of holding caucuses, where a half dozen or so persons are all that can be got together, and they choose the delegates and manage things for the party. Under the Australian system voters will have no excuse for not attending the caucuses.

The report that the administration of the Patent Office has greatly improved under the present administration, as set forth by the special committee of the National Civil Service Reform League, is gratifying to all friends of Reform, who wish that the same could be said of the post office and all the other departments, where the spoilsmen have been allowed their own way in too many cases. The friends of reform, however, are glad to get encouragement from any source and hope that the good work will spread at Washington.

SEVERAL families report that they were not visited by the Census enumerators, and probably there are others who were left uncounted, which will reduce Newton's total somewhat. It ought to be 25,000, and if it falls short of that number we shall have to call on those who were missed to send in their names.

We have received a copy of Congressman Butterworth's famous speech against the McKinley tariff bill, which is headed "The protection policy—its wise use will strengthen it—its abuse will destroy it." The McKinley crowd sought to paste this in their hats.

He was a grand old gentleman, of courteous manners and superior intelligence, possessing real Christian virtues. His charities were unostentatious, yet his heart was full of sweet sympathy and kindness. A widow and son survive him. The funeral took place from his late residence, Tuesday afternoon, Rev. D. H. Bird conducting this famous galaxy of musicians from the Newtonville station to the spot of lawn especially reserved for the distinguished artists. The occasion was thoroughly enjoyed and fair ladies and pretty girls vied with each other in their ministrations to the material wants, refreshments being served on the piazzas of the various houses. An elaborate display of fireworks was given under the supervision of Mr. W. F. —Will that railroad track be re-located on River street? There was considerable talk concerning gravel at the hearing.

—Another horse is needed for the patrol wagon. With the amount of territory to be covered, one horse will prove unequal to the emergency.

—Mr. F. F. Raymond and family have gone away for the summer. Their house will be occupied during their absence by Mr. Samuel Carr, Jr.

—George Dearborn has rented the house in the block on Waltham street adjoining that occupied by himself and family and will fit it up for lodgers.

—P. Cavichio's fruit wagon was overturned at the corner of Highland and Washington streets, yesterday afternoon, and 150 quarts of berries spilled in the dirt. The accident resulted from the frightening of the horse, the animal running up Washington street with the wagon, and colliding with the curbstone in turning Highland street.

—The United States Police Register is the name of a new monthly publication devoted to the interests of the police department in the country. Under the caption of Worcester these statistics appear which will prove interesting reading for the friends of temperance: "Arrests for May under non-license, 161; arrests for April under non-license, 324."

—William Maloney, Boston man, claims that he was set upon by two companions, Thomas Grady and John Thornton, on Webster street, Saturday, and that an attempt was made to rob him of $26. Maloney was roughly handled and his clothing badly torn in an encounter, which was fortunately interrupted by the arrival of Officers J. J. Davis and Clay, who arrested the three men and locked them up at the central station. In the police court Monday morning, Grady and Thornton were arraigned for assault and battery upon Maloney, the evidence being insufficient to warrant their arraignment for a greater offence. They were found guilty and each sentenced to two months in the house of correction.

—Any of our citizens contemplating making purchases in furniture will make a mistake if they do not see the latest styles at Paine's Furniture Co., 48 Canal street, Boston, before selecting. —The usual open house was observed by members of Hose 5, the Fourth of July, ice cream, cake, watermelons, lemonade, etc., being abundantly provided for their friends, who dropped in during the day, some seventy-five persons thus testing the efficiency of the hose company in a different way than as fire extinguishers.

—The Cincinnati Times-Star utters a timely protest against the "mascots" who attend baseball games: "We'll win today," they cheerfully announce upon arriving, "I'm here." And with that they sit in their seats, confidently smiling in the certainty that their presence means victory. Of course they are sometimes disappointed and then they will observe that there was a "Jonah" concealed somewhere. Now the only mascot in ball playing is the good work of the team and the only Jonah is to be found in the error column.—New York Tribune.

There is a sadly frivolous Boston young woman, who says that her pa can turn out bachelors more expeditiously than any collector, because he doesn't do it by degrees. DEATH OF WILLARD MARCY.

PROMINENT CITIZEN EXPIRES SUDDENLY FROM HEART DISEASE.

Mr. Willard Marcy, a prominent resident of this city, died very suddenly Saturday morning of heart disease. The deceased left his home in Newton Upper Falls shortly before 8 o'clock, and hurried to take the train for Boston, leaving the station at Upper Falls about 8 o'clock. Immediately after the train had got under way it was discovered that Mr. Marcy had lost consciousness. The train was stopped, and Mr. Marcy was immediately taken to his home, where he died soon after.

Mr. Marcy was born in Harland, Vt., and was 68 years of age. He had resided in this city for about thirty years and was highly respected and esteemed. Under the old town government, he had occupied nearly every office in the gift of his townsmen, from that of village constable to that of Selectman, having also been Overseer of the Poor, Assessor, and chief of the old town fire department. From the date of its incorporation he was an officer and stockholder in the Newton Savings Bank, and at the time of his death was a member of the Board of Trustees and the investment committee. He was a trustee and prominent member of the Methodist church of Newton Upper Falls, was always a member of the Newton Horticultural society, every year contributing to make its exhibitions successful.

Mr. Marcy never held any office under the city government, although frequently urged by his friends to accept the Republican nomination for the board of aldermen. He took an active interest in the city, however, and was called the "Napoleon" in the politics of his ward, his opinions having great weight with the people. During 1885-86 he served in the House of Representatives, and he had been mentioned as the next Republican candidate for senator of the 2d Middlesex district. He had been a valued member of the Newton Republican ward and city committee and also a member of the state central committee.

He was a Republican of the stalwart stripe, with decided opinions which he did not hesitate to express. He was a successful business man, and at the time of his death was president of the Massachusetts Benefit Insurance Association and a partner in a successful paper manufacturing located in Newton Upper Falls. One of the greatest efforts of Mr. Marcy's life was that of his work during the past 20 years of recovering from the United States Government the principal of $371,000, taken by its officers from the securities of the Newtonville bank, with which he was interested at the time of the defalcation of its treasurer. The entire sum was recovered about 4 years ago, largely through the efforts of Mr. Marcy, and since then he has been to Washington several times for the purpose of recovering the interest on the principal. Twice he has secured favorable bills from House committees, and twice have the bills passed the Senate, and he felt of being able at the present session of Congress to obtain the passage of the bill.

Mr. Marcy possessed sound common sense and good judgment. His loss will be greatly felt in this community. A widow, daughter and three sons survive him.

The funeral of the late Willard Marcy took place from the Methodist church, Upper Falls, Tuesday afternoon. The auditorium was completely filled with those who had gathered to pay the last tribute of respect to the deceased. Among those present were Hon. Alden Spear, representing the Boston Chamber of Commerce; G. A. Litchfield, secretary; W. G. Corbitt, treasurer; John C. Rand and S. P. Hibbard, vice-presidents of the Massachusetts Benefit Association; Joseph N. Bacon, Hon. J. F. C. Hyde, George Hyde, Samuel Jackson, Dustin Langley, Miss S. M. Duncklee and Miss Mary Kent, trustees and officers of the Newton Savings Bank; ex-Gov. Gaston and Judge R. Bishop, counsel of the deceased in the Newtonville National Bank case; C. Bowditch, Coffin, Moser, G. Crane and H. C. Wood of the Newton Republican ward and city committee; Hon. Levi C. Wade, Alderman George Petee, President E. J. Hyde of the Newton common council, Councilman Edward C. Collier, and others.

Petee, Dr. Thompson, S. T. Elliott, C. H. Bacall, Edward Billings and many other prominent business and local residents.

The services were of a simple yet impressive character. Rev. John Peterson, pastor of the church, officiating. A quartet, comprising Miss Newell, soprano; Mrs. J. A. Gould, alto; Mr. Bird, tenor; Mr. Frank Hale, bass, rendered appropriate selections, including "Gathering Roundward One by One," and "Nearer My God to Thee." Rev. Mr. Peterson's remarks were confined to words of consolation to the bereaved family. On Sunday he will speak to the young men, taking for his text: "Some of the leading characteristics in the life of Willard Marcy."

Mr. Marcy's pew, on the right side of the auditorium, was draped in black, and upon a table placed within it, a sheaf of wheat tied with blue ribbon, bearing the inscription, "At Rest." The floral tributes were placed upon the pulpit platform, and consisted of several vases and baskets of flowers from the family, and two beautiful floral tablets, one composed of ferns, gladioli and lilies, from the Newton Republican ward and city committee; the other made up of ivy, and bearing an anchor of roses from the Massachusetts Benevolent Association.

The remains were interred in the family lot in Newton cemetery.

The pall bearers were John Arnold, F. A. Fletcher, W. B. Lock and J. W. Howe of the board of trustees of the Upper Falls Methodist church, of which Mr. Marcy was a member. The funeral arrangements were in charge of Undertaker S. F. Cate, and a thorough attention was given to all the necessary details.

Resolutions.

The painful news reached us on Saturday morning, July 13th, of the death of our esteemed associate and president of this association, Mr. Willard Marcy.

We cannot fittingly put into language the expression of our sorrow and regret. During the eleven years that he has been associated with us, our appreciation of his fidelity, integrity and high sense of honor has grown with each passing year. Unassuming, but full of good common sense; unostentatious; but never shirking any responsibility; full of good sound advice, but never dictatorial, he has been of great value in his official capacity and will not be forgotten as a man and a friend.

In his removal from participation with us in the activity of this life we suffer irreparable loss. His removal from family and friends is a bereavement for which there can be no compensation; but we bow submissively as we ought to Him whose wisdom is not to be questioned, and hereby tender to his afflicted family our sincerest sympathy and condolence.

By vote of the directors of the Massachusetts Benefit Association.

—Engineer Joe Yates, for the past twenty years engineer at the Petee Machine Works, has this week discontinued his services in that capacity. His place has been taken by Jerry Murphy, formerly engineer at the upper shop.

—Miss Euphemia Walton and Mr. William Findley, were united in marriage the evening of the 3d of July, by the Rev. John Peterson. A reception to which friends were invited, was held at the house after the ceremony, and it was a merry gathering.

—The death of Mr. Willard Marcy will be a great loss to Upper Falls, as for many years he has been one of its best known and most public spirited citizens, and has done a leader from his bicycle on Saturday night, when returning from Highlandville, and was rendered unconscious for nearly three hours by the accident. He is now improving.

—Mr. M. H. Coffin enjoyed a trip down the harbor and the south shore, last Saturday, with members of the Jewelers Association, who were invited by Commodore Horner, president of the Boston Yacht Club, to take a trip on his handsome steam yacht.

—At the Methodist church next Sunday at 10:30 a.m., Rev. John Peterson will give a discourse on the life and character of the late Willard Marcy, drawing lessons therefrom of especial interest and benefit to young men, and a most cordial invitation to attend is extended to all.

—A large party of young people from Boston Highlands held a picnic on ground near the pumping station, the evening of the Fourth of July, and evidently had a glorious time; marching up Chestnut street in double file to Echo Bridge and making the village ring with their shouts and songs.

—The annual Methodist Sunday school picnic which was appointed for the 10th of July, has been postponed, to take place next Thursday, July 17, at Farm Lake Grove, Sherborn, Mass. A variety of games have been arranged, and an abundance of refreshments will be provided to which all are invited.

—A visit was made to Echo Bridge last Monday by Misses Ada Gould, May Robinson, Gertrude Woodbury, Edna Armstrong, Flossie Armstrong and Mr. Charles Nevins. Coming from the picnic, they were accompanied by dog-carts they enjoyed the day most pleasantly and were very thankful to Officer Shaughnessy for showing them through the aqueduct.

—The Paper Mill started up Wednesday morning after a stop of nearly a week. An engine of about 35 horse power with corresponding boilers is being put into the No. 2 mill this week, and the company propose to run both mills on day time as soon as ready. With the new engine they will not be forced to shut down when the river is low, and with both mills running, the night gang can be dispensed with.

—Rev. George W. Holman has closed one year of pastoral service with the second church in Newton, located at the Upper Falls, and the affairs of the church are in a much better state than they were a year ago, which is evidently destined to much work of pastoral visitation has been done with good results. The increase in attendance upon the public services has been steady and gratifying, so as to be threefold the attendance at the beginning of the year.

Prayer-meetings have developed greatly in most important respects. Converts have cheered the hearts of earnest workers. Socially, as well as spiritually, improvement has been marked. All current expenses having been promptly met. This is an important interest that should be sustained, and needed assistance ought to be rendered to the church in the most promising order of things may continue.

C. E. Notes.

The long anticipated convention of the Y. P. S. C. E. is over, and already its influence is being felt in the city. It was the largest religious convention ever held, the delegates numbering over 8,000 while the number in attendance was more than 10,000. Enthusiasm, whole-souled earnestness, and hearty fellowship were marked characteristics of the great assembly.

Many of the denominations were represented, and some of the ablest men and the addresses were of high order.

A special force attaches to the following editorial in the St. Louis Globe Democrat, coming as it does, from a secular paper.

"The Convention of the Christian Endeavor Societies is one of the most interesting and significant demonstrations that has ever come to pass in this city. It represents a movement of pronounced force and usefulness, which is evidently destined to play a leading part in the future activities and conquests of Christianity. It is not a mere holiday affair, having only a superficial and temporary interest. The fact for which it stands are of a profound and surpassing character. Above everything else such an organization testifies that religion is not losing ground in this country, and that we are becoming a nation of scoffers and infidels."

Next Tuesday, July 15, the eleventh annual session of the New England Chautauque Sunday School assembly opens for ten days at the Lakeview grounds, South Framingham, with a concert by the celebrated Ruggles street quartet in the evening.

This assembly bids fair to be a most interesting and profitable one. A set of tubular chime bells will take the place of the old kind, and will be quite a novelty in music. The grounds and cottages are in fine condition, and the building will be ready for use.

Prof. Schaffner of New York is again to have charge of the musical department, and will be assisted by several of the best musicians, as well as by the favorite Park Street and a grand chorus of from 200 to 300 trained voices. Besides the illuminations, fireworks, campfires, round tables, processions, and other amusements, there will be a course of lectures on the history of the Bible study, temperance and patriotic addresses, lectures on literature, art, travel, education and history, impersonations, stereopticon, etc. There will be sports, and general good times. No other known program in the world can compare with the Chautauque Assembly idea for thorough enjoyment and profit. There will be some sports too, if whistling and other games.

The first night, with its fine concert, illuminations and fireworks, nobody wants to miss. The ten days session can be taken in for a $2 course ticket, and one can live cheaply in a tent or in the grounds. Single days admission 25 cents. Write Samuel Cochran, Lakeview, South Framingham, for further particulars.

—The Newtons dragged that much-disputed title in the dust last Saturday afternoon in a five inning game with the Newton B. B. A. nine, in which they were defeated by a score of 29 to 2. The Newton B. B. A. nine certainly has the call and easily outplayed their opponents at every point. The battery work of the Newtons was a redeeming feature, but the heavy hitters of Managood's Wood's nine proved too strong a card for the pitching talent of the colt team. Appended is the score by innings:

Newton B. B. A., 13; ATTLEBOROS, 6.
Bent pitched a fine game for the Newton B. B. A. nine on the afternoon of July 4, at Attleboro, where the local team was easily defeated. The visitors fielded well and batted hard, rolling up 19 total hits. Only three of the Attleboros succeeded in hitting Bent's curves and drops and 4 out of 6 hits were made by Mahtene who done some remarkable stick work. Daniels caught a fine game and batted in great shape, whacking out a home run. Sullivan played well at second and hit the ball hard. The score is appended:

The St. Marys of Everett visited West Newton last Saturday and were defeated by the St. Bernards in the literary league series. The St. Bernards presented their new battery which proved an effective one. They were short their second baseman and center field and presented two substitutes. The features were Farrell's pitching; Duane's catching and the battery work of the visitors. The score:

OBSERVANCE OF INDEPENDENCE DAY.

ELABORATE PROGRAM CARRIED OUT AT NEWTON CENTRE.

At Newton Centre, the anniversary of the signing of the declaration of independence was fittingly observed and an elaborate program was carried out under the auspices of the Newton Centre Improvement Association, the only real live organization of its class in the city. The requirements of young and old were duly considered in the character and variety of amusements and the day was practically given up to that enjoyment in which everybody seemed to be equal sharer.

In the morning, at 8 o'clock, the shores surrounding Crystal Lake were utilized by many spectators who had gathered in anticipation of the fun to be derived from a series of boat and tub races, followed by a swimming match. The events and winners are appended:

The judges of the events on the lake were Messrs. Frank Edmonds and W. M. Flanders.

In the morning, about 10 o'clock, or shortly after the races on the lake, a series of athletic sports took place on the common, attracting a large number of spectators. Appended are the events and the winners.

The bicycle parade of the young ladies was one of the prettiest features of the morning exercises, the following young women on safeties participating: Julia Fowle, Fannie Edmonds, Maud Hammond, Alice Ward, Angie Parker, Marion Haskell, Helen Colburn, Mattie Payne, Rebecca Edmonds, Dora Gardner, Edith Parker, Lillian Hunter, Fannie Wildes, Carrie Rogers, May Colburn, Marion Wheelock, May Ward.

The wheels were gayly decorated with bunting and ribbons, and the fair riders were attired in a variety of becoming costumes. When the charming and graceful riders executed a number of pretty movements and evolutions, the spectators with hearty applause from the spectators, who thus gave evidence of their sincere appreciation. The girls were drilled in this interesting feature of the exercises by Mr. Frank Edmonds.

The judges in the athletic contests were Messrs. W. L. Church and Frank Fennessy.

In the afternoon entertainment features were provided for the children on the Common, consisting of a display of day fireworks, paper balloon ascensions and the rendition of a musical program by the National Glee band. While this exhibition was being enjoyed by the little folks, an interesting game of ball was played on Walworth's field between the Newton Centres and Centre club. Both sides included in their make-up well known college players and the quality of the game, abounding in sharp plays and clean fielding, was sufficient to engage the close scrutiny of a large and representative gathering of ladies and gentlemen.

The writer has witnessed professional games, affording a much less degree of interest. The excitement over the result was kept up through 8 innings with the score 1 to 1. The Newton Centres by a streak of good batting in the ninth innings added 2 more runs to their score and won the game. The features were the work of both batteries, in which the pitchers scored nearly equal honors, Kistler proving most effective, only 6 total hits being made off his puzzling delivery. The Newton Centres were unable to size up Armstrong until the ninth inning, and only succeeded in getting 16 total hits during the game. The fielding support was generally excellent and comparatively few errors were made outside of the batteries.

Hatch, the catcher of the Centre club, was injured in the eighth inning and Richardson took his place behind the bat. Fine double plays were made by Sanborn, Burrage and Rising. Hovey accepted 7 out of 8 chances at short for the Centre club, his only error being a bad throw over the first baseman's head. Some of the pretty girls who watched the game thought that Empire Church was a trifle off on balls and strikes. The girls, by the way, have a pretty good idea of the national game, but an umpire's position is no sinecure, and one who officiates in that capacity must expect more or less criticism as a matter of course. The writer thinks, however, that a close decision on second, probably shut out a run for the Centre club. This was in the case of Hovey, who reached second safely by a phenomenal slide, but who was declared out by Umpire Stacy. The appended score gives the details of the game:

In the evening a band concert was enjoyed, followed by the presentation of prizes. These consisted of handsome silver medals, appropriately engraved. A grand display of fireworks was then given from a raft moored in Crystal Lake, which it is estimated, was witnessed by about 5,000 people. This feature was carried by the United States Fireworks Company, and the display included shells with brilliantly colored fire, four-billions, saucissons, batteries, colored fire and the usual variety of rockets.

The day at Newton Centre will be pleasantly remembered and the entire program was most successfully carried out under the direction of the special committee of the Improvement Association. Messrs. L. Living Brooks, S. A. Shannon and A. C. Perry.

Save Your Hair

By a timely use of Ayer's Hair Vigor. This preparation has no equal as a dressing. It keeps the scalp clean, cool, and healthy, and preserves the color, fullness, and beauty of the hair.

"I was rapidly becoming bald and gray; but after using two or three bottles of Ayer's Hair Vigor my hair grew thick and glossy and the original color was restored."—Melvin Aldrich, Canaan Centre, N. H.

"Some time ago I lost all my hair in consequence of measles. After due waiting, no new growth appeared. I then used Ayer's Hair Vigor and my hair grew Thick and Strong. It has apparently come to stay. The Vigor is evidently a great aid to nature."—J. B. Williams, Floresville, Texas.

"I have used Ayer's Hair Vigor for the past four or five years and find it a most satisfactory dressing for the hair. It is all I could desire, being harmless, causing the hair to retain its natural color, and requiring but a small quantity to render the hair easy to arrange."—Mrs. M. A. Bailey, 9 Charles street, Haverhill, Mass.

"I have been using Ayer's Hair Vigor for several years, and believe that it has caused my hair to retain its natural color."—Mrs. H. J. King, Dealer in Dry Goods, &c., Bishopville, Md.

The Great Benefit.
Which people in run down state of health derive from Hood's Sarsaparilla, conclusively proves that this medicine "makes the weak strong," it does not act like a stimulant, imparting fictitious strength, but Hood's Sarsaparilla builds up in a perfectly natural way all the weakened parts, purifies the blood, and assists to healthy action those important organs, the kidneys and liver.

"Shall I put a head on this communication?" asked the reporter. "No" was the reply, "reserve your efforts for the man who wrote it."—(Washington Post.)

Cold, cough, croup is what philosophers term "logical sequence." One is very liable to follow the other; but by curing the cold with a dose of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, the cough will be stopped and the croup need not—just at present.

There is no better way to spend a vacation than a trip by steamer through the great lakes; no more expensive than a few weeks at a country boarding house. Special inducements to tourists. Address J. A. Flanders, agent, 322 Washington street, Boston.

The inestimable value of Ayer's Sarsaparilla as a blood-purifier should be known to every wife and mother. It corrects irregularities, gives tone and strength to the vital organs, and cleanses the system of all impurities. The best family medicine.

Commendable.
All claims not connected with the high character of Syrup of Figs are purposely avoided by the Cal. Fig Syrup Company. It acts gently on the kidneys, liver and bowels, cleansing the system effectually, but it is not a cure-all and makes no pretensions that every bottle will not substantiate.

—The Professor drawing a letter out of his pocket: "It is very strange. I'm sure I put this letter in the letter box, but, searching further, 'goodness gracious! where's my handkerchief?'—(Philadelphia Times.)

A man's capacity for endurance in some respects changes after marriage. The lover that never grumbled at holding a 130-pound girl for hours, grumbles if he has to hold a 10 pound baby two minutes.—(Philadelphia Press.)

A new idea embraced in Ely's Cream Balm. Catarrh is cured by cleansing and healing, not by drying up. It is not a light or stuff, but is easily applied into the nostrils. Its effect is magical and a thorough treatment will cure the worst cases. Price 50c.

With Ely's Cream Balm a child can be treated without pain or dread and with perfect safety. Try the remedy. It cures catarrh, hay fever and colds in the head. It is easily applied into the nostrils and gives relief with the first application. Price 50c.

Ask Your Friends About It.
Your distressing cough can be cured. We know it because Kemp's Balsam within the past few years has cured so many coughs and colds in this community. Its remarkable sale has been won entirely by its genuine merit. Ask some friend who has used it what he thinks of Kemp's Balsam. There is no medicine so pure, none so effective. Large bottles 50c and $1 at all druggists.

"Please give me your name," said the enumerator. "Sally Andrews; but it won't be after Wednesday."—(New York Sun.)

"You think you know yourself, my boy, but you don't." "Oh yes, I do; I know all the best people around here."—(Bazar.)

Delicate Ladies!
Who have that tired and all-gone feeling, and don't like to be disturbed, will continue to be troubled with this complaint until they renew their impure blood. Sulphur Bitters will cause new and rich blood to course through every artery and vein in the human system. See another column.

A Spring Medicine.
The druggists claim that people call daily for the new cure for constipation and sick headache, discovered by Dr. Silas Lane while in the Rocky Mountains. It is said to be Oregon grape root (a leafy remedy in the far west for those complaints) combined with simple herbs, and is made for use by pouring on boiling water to draw out the strength. It sells at 50 cents a package and is called Lane's Family Medicine.

Mr. Hahn will now devote his whole time to his new store at Newton which he hopes to open in a few days, and his friends here hope for him success in his new venture. Those now having accounts with Mr. Hahn will confer a favor by an early settlement.

—The Fourth of July at Oak Hill. The suburban village of the city was not without its enjoyment on this ever memorable day. One of the notable gatherings of the day was a picnic party on the grounds of Mr. Alonzo Mick, Bodham street. The party consisted of the Rev. W. M. Mick and family, Mr. Bond, of the Boston Traveller, and family, Mr. Young and family, Mr. Shepard and wife of Waltham, together with a few families, neighbors and friends of the host and hostess, of Oak Hill. A bountiful collation was spread under the spacious trees on the lawn. After grace, by Rev. Lyman King, the menu, which was both varied and abundant, was ably discussed much to the satisfaction of the inner man. The after dinner speeches elicited much applause. The Rev. W. M. Mick in his happy manner extolled the city of Newton and congratulated himself on having thus early secured a foothold there. He was especially enthusiastic over Oak Hill, prophesying that it was destined to become "the nabob of this commonwealth city." The remainder of the day was spent in a social manner, many games, the mystery of which was not readily solved by all, afforded much amusement, especially to the brilliant ones. The children were amply provided with means to arouse the spirit of patriotism which they heartily enjoyed. Early in the evening lunch was served, after which the party gave cheer for their friends who had so kindly entertained them, returned to their homes.

—Rev. W. A. Benedict, who has been for nearly seven years residing at the South, spoke last Sunday evening in the Congregational church on the Southern problem, which he defines as follows: "It is the two races as distinct and separate as the white and colored races of the South, equal before the law, live together in the enjoyment of all the rights of citizenship, and live in Christian peace and love." He remarked that this problem is not sectional, but national. We are all citizens of one country. What affects one part affects the whole. What involves one section involves the nation. This southern problem is a national peril, which is right upon us. It cannot be put off to sight. Its consideration cannot be postponed. It is a problem which must be met promptly, earnestly and wisely. The chief feature to be regarded in the solution of this problem is the colored population of the South, numbering some eight million—the product of a slower system of two hundred years standing, and which has just been characterized as "the sum of villainies." Their characteristics are just what we might expect. There are many noble individuals, but the masses are low down in the scale of intelligence and morality. They are religious, but their religion is to a lamentable extent, divorced from morality. There is much of indolence, untruthfulness and dishonesty among them. In their ignorance and vice, they constitute a dangerous element in our midst. They are devoid of the qualifications of citizenship. They must be reached and lifted up. The safety of the nation demands it. The work is a great one, but it can be done. The most effective way of doing it is by the establishment of Christian schools, particularly for normal and industrial instruction, in which those fitted to be teachers and leaders may have the needed training. Mr. Benedict then spoke of the great work of the American Missionary Association in establishing such schools, and of the pressing necessity for the enlargement of this work, which can be done only as the churches greatly increase their contributions.

THE CITY GOVERNMENT.

HEARING OVER THE PROPOSED MEMORIAL HALL BUILDING.

Both branches of the city government met Monday night, and finished up business for the summer, adjourning to September 8th. In the board of aldermen all the members were present, with President Pettee in the chair.

The following were appointed special policemen: Chas. R. Young, Patrick E. O'Neill, Thomas G. Bruce, Reuben D. Clafflin, Chas. Tappley, Martin B. Nagle and Robert W. Blue.

The Newton Street Railway Co. gave notice of their acceptance of the order extending the time for the opening of the road to August 1st.

Henry A. Barker asked for license to build a stable on Chestnut street, Ward 3; referred to license committee.

Frank B. Fletcher gave notice of intention to erect a house 28 by 35 on Harrison street, Ward 5, and P. C. Bridgman house 25 by 29 on Cabot street, Ward 2.

V. Pluta asked for electric street light on Rowe near Auburn street.

B. B. Buck asked for a 6th class liquor license for his drug store on Beacon street, near Centre.

Geo. E. Stuart was granted a license to build a block 41 by 50, for stores and tenements, corner of Watertown and West streets.

An order was passed appropriating $74,700 for the city's expenses during August and September.

An order was passed for the laying of 217 feet of 6-in. water pipe on Pleasant street, and 600 feet of 6-in. pipe on California street, at a total cost of $825.

RIVER STREET.

Alderman Bond presented an order for the change of the location of the street railway on River street, from the side to the centre of the street. He said the hearing showed the desirability of the change, and in regard to time, although the petitioners started late, they did so because they understood that the rails were to be put in the centre of the street throughout the city. The city engineer was being signed the railroad was informed of it, and putting on an extra large force of men they worked with great rapidity, so as to get the work finished before the city council could act. The president of the company had said that had they been notified by a city official, they would have moved their tracks, but they received no notice. They had pursued a policy of bluff throughout, and he thought it very desirable that the tracks should be moved. The simplest way to do a thing was to make it right at the start. The order had once passed by a vote of 5 to 2, but because of an informality, it was decided to have a new hearing, and then to pass the order again.

Alderman Johnson said that the company had been notified of the petition by Policeman Ryan, who had notified the acting superintendent. Some of the petitioners had been paid to lay down their names, one of them getting 200 loads of gravel. It was far more important that the road should be in the centre of River street, than on Washington street, as there were more children on River street, and the street was much wider than Washington street. There was no reason for the company's going ahead as they did.

Alderman Harbach said he believed in having the tracks in the centre of the street, but he did not believe in making the company move their tracks. They had only followed their legal rights in going ahead and laying the tracks as they had permission to do, and the company should not be made to pay for the delay of the petitioners.

Alderman Fennos said he should vote against the order. The board had asked the company to change their overhead structure, and they had done so, and now if the tracks are ordered moved their structure would be of no use.

The order was defeated by vote of 4 to 2 but before the result was announced, Alderman Johnson changed his vote, and gave notice that he should move a reconsideration at the next meeting.

Wm. Clafflin asked for sidewalks on Washington street, Ward 2.

The joint convention was then held to give a hearing on the proposed Memorial Hall, a large number of Grand Army men and prominent citizens being present.

President Pettee read the original petition, calling for the appointment of a special committee of the city council, to confer with a committee of Chas. Ward Post and one of the citizens, and said the joint committee had made a general study of the subject, and had had plans submitted to them for a building to cost $41,991, exclusive of heating or furnishing. The committee could not harmonize on the proposal that the city should pay one-half or about $20,000 and so the hearing was granted.

MR. HENRY E. COBB

said the question was one of such vital interest that he thought the petition should have been signed by a majority of the citizens if such a thing had been needed to convince the city council of its importance. They were not endeavoring to obtain a drill hall, or an auditorium, or a ward room, but a memorial hall. He spoke of the feeling in Newton 25 years ago, which those who were boys then could not realize, and he wished he could call down some of those who had gone before, to speak for the question. J. Wiley Edmonds, or Thomas Rice, Jr., who would both plead that Newton should do something. Men were then trembling with anxiety for fear their names on the world's roll of fame, that would last through all future generations. That their wives and children would be tenderly cared for, and if they died they would always be remembered among the world's heroes. If they came back, they would always have love and tender sympathy, and all would be done for them that could be done. How have you fulfilled those promises. I would not dare to face future generations, if I were you and voted against this project. I would not dare to look in the faces of my children, if I voted against appropriating such a paltry sum. The building would stand for all time, it might add to the expenses for a year or two, but why should the old soldier wait while you widen a street because you have given it to a private corporation? The citizens would give gladly but it was the duty of the city to aid in the matter, to give the city a chance to contribute. We see beautiful buildings put up by other cities, and our city should do something. The building would be used for a few years by the Grand Army, but then the building would belong to the city. There should be some room in it for the use of the city, either a ward room, or a branch of the public library, or a drill hall. There are very valuable memorials to be placed in it, many of great local interest, like the sword and sash of that hero whom you all know, Chas. Ward, who in future time will be regarded as Paul Revere. Miles Standish is now. So many such articles could be placed in it, which would be object lessons in patriotism for all future generations. The figures of the cost are merely guesses, plans which you may adopt. We don't care for anything but justice, and so far the city has never expended one dollar for a memorial of its brave sons. The city should be ashamed not to do something, and I believe you will feel it a great privilege to vote something from the funds of the city.

MR. G. D. GILMAN

said he thought the papers represented public sentiment, one was enthusiastic for it, and while the other favored it, it had some doubts whether this was the time to do it. As far as he could learn that was the general sentiment. He believed the city should act, and have a building we may all be proud of. Our public buildings are now a matter of pride with the citizens, the city council is well quartered in its city hall, and he hoped the council would see its way clear to make the appropriation. It would be a good investment for the city, bring people here, and be the first monument to the dead soldiers erected by the city. He had yet to hear of any sensible appeal that was disregarded in Newton. There may be some extraordinary expenses just now, but there have always been extraordinary expenses in Newton, and there always will be. The additional tax would trouble no one, and the tax payers would be glad to pay it and he thought the council would regard it as a duty to vote unanimously for it.

EX-ALDERMAN CHADWICK

said it was his heart's desire to have a memorial hall in Newton, and the city government ought to do something. Many would hate to subscribe because they could give only a small amount, but they would be glad to have a chance to give something in their taxes. There are always bugears that can be brought up, like sewerage, but that would not cost a great sum, and Newton should do something as well as Brockton and other cities, which have not her wealth.

spoke strongly in favor of the project, and said we owed the veterans a tender and loving tribute and a building would give expression to that, and the building would serve as a monument to those who went forth to battle for the Union. He hoped and prayed the city council would grant the petition.

HON. WM. CLAFFLIN

was not present and Councilman Luke was called on to give the sentiments he expressed at a meeting of the committee. Mr. Luke said he had recalled the promises made to the soldiers and we ought to keep them. The citizens had striven to make as liberal promises as they could but so far nothing of any account had been done.

REV. T. J. HOLMES

said he favored anything for the benefit of the old soldiers. He was of the opinion that as time goes on the respect that is to be paid to them was dying out, and he had heard many things said that were not respectful. One man in Boston had said that in view of all the expense for pensions, it would have been better to have let the soldiers go quietly out of the Union. He was sorry to see such a spirit of disloyalty abroad, and one object of the building would be to show that 25 years after the war Newton was as loyal as ever. It would keep fresh the memory of the dead and honor the living.

MR. E. P. BOND

said his heart responded to all the patriotic sentiments that had been expressed, and he felt it ungenerous to put himself in opposition, but still it was a question in his mind what right the city council had to vote away money levied for ordinary purposes, for a building not belonging to the municipal government. If this was a mass meeting for the levying of taxes he would say amen to the appeal, but he doubted if such an elected for a definite purpose had a right to go outside of that.

Mr. Gilman asked if the council had not the same right to vote money for a hall as for Memorial Day.

Councilman Datch asked who would go to the building from the hall, who would own the building?

Mr. Cobb said the city would own the buildings, but would probably respect the wishes of the Grand Army. The city of Boston lets a hall to a Boston Post for $1 a year. He did not think Newton should haggle about the right when all other cities were doing the same thing. The citizens would protest against the city doing all, but it ought to do something, as so far it has done nothing. There were times when legal technicalities should be disregarded.

Councilman Datch asked if the city would receive a fair rate of interest. Mr. Cobb said the city would receive a large benefit. The G. A. R. encampment would meet in Boston in August, and in the reawakening of patriotic feeling it would be much easier to raise subscriptions, and therefore he hoped immediate action would be taken.

MR. L. G. PRATT

said he thought the city council had no legal right to vote money in this way, and there was a better plan. We need a new city hall, and he thought the Memorial Hall should be built in connection with the City Hall, and then the city would have a building that would be creditable. He had heard it stated that the citizens had been liberal in making promises, and that an ex-governor had said nothing had been done for the soldiers. It was the most absurd statement he ever heard of, and he was sorry to hear a man who had been a governor of the commonwealth make such an absurd statement. Look at the large appropriation made by Congress for old soldiers, $120,000,000 a year, and more is coming. There seemed to be no end to the calls for money for the soldiers, and when sewerage and other great expenses were pressing so hard he thought it was no time to vote money for a memorial hall, and a strong sentiment was growing against it. He did not want to oppose anything reasonable.

REV. H. J. PATRICK

said he appeared for the boys and girls of the city, in favor of a drill hall, we needed that, and others had spoken so well for the Memorial Hall that he might continue himself to the drill hall. He had been called on every few days the past year for 40 cents for tickets to carry his boys to Amory Hall and back, and when they got there that hall was not big enough, and much time was wasted in going to and fro. He called attention to the great bundle of petitions sent in for a drill hall, and it could be combined admirably with the Memorial Hall. The girls also needed a place for their calisthenic exercises.

MR. GEO. A. WALTON

said a drill shed should be connected with the high school, the city had bought land to build it on, and it needed to be next the school so that it could be used. He did not know where the hall was to be built. "At Newtonville," said Rev. Mr. Patrick. There were so many important matters pressing, sewerage with great outlays within one or two years; $300,000 for high water service, the most expensive system of schools in the state, more expensive roads than any other city or town, and so on, that they might well shrink from adding to them. We should secure to the living all they are entitled to, and the hall might wisely be deferred for 5 or 10 years till other matters were out of the way. We were getting such a high tax rate people were being driven away from the city, and prudence dictates that we attend to ordinary expenses first.

EX-ALDERMAN WARD

said he did not feel that the plan was the best that could be adopted. He believed in having a Memorial hall, but if it was used for private theatricals, or a drill and such things, it would take away from the sacredness of the place. If the city built at all it should build for memorial purposes only, but he thought it would have a much more sacred character if the hall was built from private subscriptions. The monument in the cemetery was built by private subscription, a great many giving a dollar towards it. If Newton Centre could raise $15,000 for a play ground, he thought subscriptions enough could be got from the whole city to build the hall. As for a drill shed he did not believe in it, and if the boys wanted exercise they could march back and forth to Amory Hall for their drill. Girls used to walk from West Newton to the High school at Newton Centre.

Rev. Mr. Patrick said things had changed now, people wanted to ride and some people wanted electric cars to run in front of their door (laughter).

MR. MOSES G. CRANE

said he favored the drill and his boys had been much benefited by it, and a separate drill hall on the High school grounds would be of advantage. If the city gave $30,000 it would add 5 per cent. to the taxes of all.

REV. F. B. HORN BROOKE

said he fully sympathized with the endeavor to have a Memorial Hall, as a reminder of the services and patriotism of the men of the war; he fully sympathized also with Mr. Patrick but as he lived in Newton it was more economical for him to have the drill in Amory Hall. As a member of the school committee he felt that we had not done our duty to the children, as long as we leave the High school building unfinished. As for the Memorial Hall he thought it would be a good plan to combine and provide for the various needs of the city. We need a new city hall, the children need a drill hall, and if one building is made to unite all these, it can be made the best kind of a memorial and made sacred by its uses. He did not think the setting of a thing apart like a fetish made it sacred, the soldiers made their names sacred because they did their work so well. A Memorial City Hall would best preserve the memories of the soldiers, and be for the benefit of all coming generations. Gather all these uses in one building, make it beautiful in its architecture, and its fitness for use, and we would then show our devotion to the memories of the soldiers, who could have rooms in it set apart for their use. Mr. Horn Brooke's views were received with very hearty applause.

MR. CHAS. W. SHEPARD

said that 5 per cent. added to the taxes would make it more difficult for many young men to live in Newton. They had hard work to raise money for their taxes now, and the burden was felt to be onerous. He objected to paying out city funds for objects which were not necessary, as the necessary expenses were heavy enough, and it was not wise to drive men away. The valuation was high and the taxes more than in many other places.

The joint convention was then dissolved, and an order was passed calling on the city solicitor to ascertain whether the Newton Street Railway had any rights in a location in Walnut street, or other streets leading to Newton Centre either from the action of the city council or from the general court.

The common council transacted current business and both branches adjourned to the second Monday evening in September.

Protect the Forests.

Forests are the natural store-houses of water supply. Their shade enables the soil to absorb and retain vast quantities of water, letting it escape gradually into the streams. Once the trees are cut off, the soil dries up, the natural reservoir is gone, the water pours pell mell into the rivers, freshets bring disaster and ruin in every great storm, and when the water supply is gone, the water power is also gone. Some persons think that the cause of the dreadful western cyclones is to be found in the destruction of the trees which once protected the land.

The dense forests in the heart of the White Mountains, said to cover 800 square miles,—that is the tract of country bounded by the Saco, Ammonoosuc and Pemigewasset Rivers and Lake Umbagog,—are being invaded by railroads, wood cutters and saw mills; and it is estimated that in ten years this area will be practically stripped of trees and the beauty and great utility of the mountains will be lost.

The vital interests of the hotel keepers, of the factory owners, of the tourists, of the State all demand the preservation of the forests.

If we had a national board of foresters whose duties should be to oversee and direct tree cutting, to prevent reckless and indiscriminate cutting, in short to see that trees are selected for felling with a view to the judicious cultivation of a yearly crop; or, if the woods could be taken and held by the State as public parks, there would be reason to believe that our once large but now rapidly dwindling forests would continue to delight this and succeeding ages, and more important yet, that the wealth which would be saved, and that in many cases life and property would be spared the ravages of the elements. There seems little prospect of such success however. But our legislators "in their infinite wisdom" might, before allowing the McKinley Bill to become law, just take the duty on timber and while thus reducing the cost of building, also giving some measure of protection to our own trees.

The Talking Wool-Growers.

Time was when the practice of medicine consisted, outside of the administration of nasty and irrelevant compounds, in bleeding the patient. No matter what the trouble, the first, last, and best resource of the alleged doctor was the lancet. The sicker the unhappy victim, the more blood must be drawn from him, and the appropriate synonym for "physician" was "leech."

The medical fraternity has abandoned the idea underlying the treatment by depletion, but the talking wool-growers of this country have taken it up in its entirety, and seem yearly to grow more strong in the faith. We have seen no evidence that the actual wool-growers approve of the policy of further bleeding, by means of a super-McKinley tariff on wool, the unhappy wool-manufacturing interest; but the talking wool-growers are still sure that the seven years' illness of the woolen industry can only be cured by rendering impossible the now difficult task of getting the foreign wools needed for a large variety of fine fabrics.

In proof of this we reproduce a part of the report of the National Wool-Growers' Convention at Galveston on Wednesday last, when the following resolutions were adopted:

"That we earnestly recommend that any further changes that may be made in the McKinley bill shall be only such as will give to the wool-growers of the United States protection on wool as grown by American flockmasters. That we protest emphatically against any law that will, in terms or by implication, permit wool to be imported in any other than its natural condition as shorn from the sheep, except as washed or scoured in broken fleeces."

Another resolution was adopted deprecating the decimation of ewe flocks West of the Mississippi by killing them for market instead of holding them for breeders. That is, after bleeding the wool-manufacturers till they have left little purchasing power, these worthless little farmers for making the most profitable disposition of his wool-producing animals.

How much longer wool manufacturers in this country are to be subjected to this obsolete abuse of "bleeding" by illogical and excessive duties on raw material no one can with certainty predict. So long as the only opposition to the talking wool-growers came from the timid and easily disciplined National Association of Wool Manufacturers, there seemed to be little chance of healthy organized reaction among the manufacturers themselves. Now, however, Delano, Harpster & Co. have a new and, we think, a genuine antagonist.

The Wool-Consumers' Association, with headquarters at Boston, was duly organized a week ago, and its address shows that its creed is identical with the views repeatedly expressed by this paper. An examination of the list of signers will show that many of the gentlemen have supported the Republican party, and this circumstance lends added force to the proclamation.

The latest news from Washington indicates that the McKinley bill will pass, but those who know that freer raw material must come will not drop the fight on that account or on any other.—Dry Goods Economist.

Foreign Wool.

Meet the alien sheep at the frontier, and do not permit his golden fleece in this high-taxed land. Keep out foreign wool as the Boston Yankees did British teas, and there is no question that the wool-growing industry of this country would make a mighty jump—and that smuggling would become a great and profitable industry, and the cost of hiding the nakedness of inhabitants and preserving the warmth of their bodies could be effected at not exceeding twice the present expense, which is now only double that which the people of England, France, and Germany pay.—Chicago Tribune.

By the showing of scientists and the experience of parents, physicians and nurses, throughout the country, the claims of Mellin's Food have been thoroughly established. It is in the form of a dry powder, consisting entirely of soluble and assimilable matter, the indigestible portions being eliminated by careful scientific processes.

NORMAL SCHOOL MOVEMENT.

SUPT. SEEVER ON "THE PROFESSIONAL TRAINING OF TEACHERS."

At the meeting of the American Institute of Instruction, last week, at Saratoga, Edwin P. Seaver, superintendent of public schools, Boston, made an address on "The Professional Preparation of Teachers." Mr. Seaver, in opening, referred to the normal school movement, which began some 50 years ago, as the most important movement in modern educational history, and as one in which the American Institute of Instruction had always cherished a deep interest. He proposed to note some of the things done, and some of the things yet remaining to be done before this movement should have accomplished all that was desirable. To the credit of our present normal schools may be set down their success in spreading the conviction that the professional preparation of teachers, as a matter apart from their advancement in pure scholarship, is a prime necessity; in improving the current methods of teaching; in promoting the study among teachers of the science and the art of teaching; in winning the popular recognition, such as it is, of teaching as a liberal or learned profession; and in reawakening the great popular interest in education which has marked these latter years. On the other side of the account, however, must be noted the fact that the normal schools have not yet overcome an unfortunate lack of scholarship which circumstances have compelled them to overlook in their students, both at the time of their admission and subsequently. This is a hindrance to the proper business of the normal schools, which is professional training. Neither have the normal schools to any appreciable extent brought their professional training to bear on the teachers of high schools and academies. The idea, however, of a teachers' seminary, as proposed more than 50 years ago, is of an institution having like those of a college or of a professional school in a university. If we ask what the universities have done toward giving professional training to teachers, the answer is, almost nothing. For 50 years the normal school movement, the most important modern movement in educational history, has been going on, but the universities have taken no part in it. Yet the great function of the university is "to teach and furnish the world with teachers."

Coming now to the practical question what provision could best be made for the professional training of college graduates who are going to be teachers, three answers have been suggested. The first answer—that college graduates should go to the present normal schools—may be dismissed as impracticable; the second, that a new normal school of higher grade should be established, may be set aside because there are strong practical reasons for preferring another plan. The third, and to my mind the only fully satisfactory answer, is, that the universities themselves take up the matter in good earnest, and provide us with such professional schools as it lies in their power, and their power only, to establish. No new seminary, standing outside of and unrelated to the university, could command anything like the success winning prestige which a seminary organized within the university precincts would enjoy. No, the new teachers' seminary that we want must have all the prestige that an organic connection with the university can give it; must have at command all the libraries, the laboratories, the museums, the collections; all the lectures and courses of instruction; all the professors; in a word, all the rich and varied resources of the university; in short must be a part of the university in the same way that the divinity school, law school, medical school, or any other professional school, is a part of the university. Is this asking too much? Is anything more needed than to prove the great probable usefulness of such a school? What I would advocate, then, is the establishment of a teachers' seminary within the precincts of every university or college whose graduates in any considerable number turn to teaching as a profession. And in advancing this proposition, I have in mind not the older universities only, Harvard, Yale, Columbia, Princeton and the rest, but the younger as well, and especially the colleges for women, which of late years have become large and strong and excellent.

Among the female assistant teachers in our high schools, the proportion of college graduates has increased of late to a marked extent, and promises to increase still more in the future. Doubtless the women's colleges will shortly become the almost exclusive source of supply for female teachers in high schools. There are indications that this matter of organizing teachers' seminaries is beginning to be looked on by university authorities in or at least as a suggestion of intelligent self-interest.

One word as to the relation which the state should hold to the proposed seminary. The state's interest in them would be a large one and a very direct one, inasmuch as the students in such seminaries would, most of them, be in training for the public school service. So large is the state's interest, that the whole cost of maintaining a separate and independent seminary of its own would not be an unreasonable financial burden to assume. But, if the universities can be induced to organize these seminaries and conduct them with the aid of all existing university resources, the state's money will be most economically expended in the shape of subsidies. These might take the form of per capita payments for all teachers trained, or, perhaps better, the form of scholarship made tenable by suitably qualified persons who would pledge themselves to enter the public school service after their training. By accepting the state's inducement in either form, each student of the important public service thus suggested, the university could at once enter into more intimate relations with the public school system, and thus would be closed a widening gap between the two, which in the older states, at least, has become a serious matter for regret and anxiety. No state ought to be obliged to look beyond the university for all the skilled and scholarly teachers the public service may require. No teachers ought to be compelled to look elsewhere for a professional instruction that the university does not give. The highest and best instruction of this kind has its natural home at the university. My appeal, therefore, is to every teacher who is a university or college graduate to urge strenuously upon his alma mater the duty, dictated no less by intelligent self-interest than by public considerations, of establishing within her precincts a strong, well equipped and ably officered teachers' seminary. When this has been done at Harvard, Yale, Columbia, Princeton, Dartmouth, Amherst, Brown, Cornell and the rest—and when Vassar, Wellesley, Smith and Bryn Mawr shall have their teachers' seminaries in full prosperity—then will have come to pass the things that were earnestly hoped for when the normal school movement began some 50 or 60 years ago.

Dreams.

According to the gypsy, to dream that you bathe in clear water is a sign that you will enjoy good health; if muddy, the death of relatives or friends. To see a bath, anger; to take a warm bath denotes happiness; if you take one either too hot or too cold, domestic troubles. If you dream without going into the water you may expect trouble, but it will soon pass away; a sea bath is a sign of honor and increase of fortune.

If anyone dream that he or she is ascending to heaven, or is already enjoying its delights, it shows that some joyful event is to happen, such as the birth of an heir to childless people, good fortune to those that are poor, distinction to the wealthy, and high honors to the ambitious. If lovers have such a dream, it foretells an early marriage under the most auspicious circumstances, and that their wedding will be attended with troops of congratulating friends, who will shower presents upon them. On the other hand, to dream of seeing hell denotes that the dreamer's life is a bad one, and is an intimation to him of reformation.

To see a coffin in your dreams signifies that you will soon be married and own a house of your own. This is a dream gypsies are always wishing for, says the gypsy book.

If any one should be so unfortunate as to dream that he or she was present at a happy and jolly wedding, it denotes that they will attend a funeral; it will not necessarily be the burial of either of the two persons you dreamed you saw married, but you will undoubtedly be called to mourn some friend or relative. To go to wedding when one is wide awake is exceedingly pleasant but we should be careful how we dream about them. To dream of being married yourself foretells your death.

For a girl to dream of raking newly-mown hay is a sign that she will be married before she is a widow. For a young man to dream of raking hay with his sweetheart had better get ready their necks for the matrimonial noose, as they are past praying for. If a man dreams he is confined in a prison or jail, it shows that he will have honors or dignities conferred upon him, as such dreams go contrarywise; if his arrest and imprisonment worries him, it only shows that he will be the more delighted with his new dignities. This is an excellent dream for politicians and office-holders, as the jail is what they would natural dream of.

For a girl to dream that she was so sleepy in church as to nod toward the minister, is a sign that she will have a young parson for a husband; if a young man dreams this, he will be apt to make up to the minister's daughter, if his position warrants it, and if not, that he will marry a girl noted for her piety. To dream of a widow signifies a reward; to dream you are a widow portends death or disappointment. To dream of a widower denotes strife and quarrels.

A fox is a sign of thieves; to dream of fighting with them shows that you will have to deal with some cunning enemy; to keep a tame fox that you will love a lewd woman, or have a bad servant who will ruin you. A number of foxes, false friends. If you dream that your mouth is stopped by a gag, it denotes that you will soon thereafter be kissed by a pretty girl. To a young girl such a dream predicts that she will see some gentleman who will take her fancy and perhaps will fall in love with him.

If you dream you are pleased with a pretty chambermaid, milkmaid, or any clean or nice-looking young girl whose occupation carries with it the title of maid, it is a good omen, for it predicts an excellent match, and plenty of children. It also predicts in many cases, that the dreamer will marry a rich wife. For a married woman to dream this is a sign she will have trouble with servants.

"You ought to be very proud." "I suppose so. I expect she will be very happy in her married life if she finds a husband who knows how to cook, sew on buttons and dress children."—Texas Siftings.

"So your fiancé is coming next week," he said, as they strolled along the beach. "I am afraid that our little walks will then be over." "I don't know about that," she answered slowly. "Yes," he said, "I am afraid so. You see my fiancé is coming too."—New York Sun.

LAWTON'S

VEGETABLE COMPOUND

BLOOD, LIVER AND KIDNEYS.

This great constitutional remedy has been on the European market for over twenty years, is superior to all others, and proven the greatest Blood Purifier and System Renovator ever compounded by medical skill. Nothing can equal it for putting the vital portions of the body in condition. If your liver is affected do you stop to think how, or what your liver is? The liver is subject to more or less little pains or aches. This organ is the sponge of the body and is continually soaked full of blood rich in poisons. Its purpose is the secretion of certain digestive and cathartic elements known as bile, and the transformation of those products of digestion which are absorbed into the blood and carried into the liver before they enter the general circulation and assist in nourishing the body. Inactivity, then, produces numerous diseases. So by using Lawton's Vegetable Compound your liver will be free from all disease. It is also absolutely necessary to know what and where are your kidneys. There are two kidneys, one on each side of the backbone. They are the only organs that purify the blood of the uric acid waste in the system. Every drop of blood courses through a great many times a day, just as through the heart. The waste matter which they should take away contains deadly poison which, if retained, causes fatal results. Sixty-five gallons of blood per hour, in the average man, passes through the kidneys, and to purify it they must be in perfect health. The kidneys are filled with many thousand hair-like tubes. These tubes run into every part of the kidney, and as the blood flows through that organ, the urine passes into these tubes, and is drained into the bladder. If these little tubes are diseased, and the uric acid is not removed, and instead of this poison coming through the blood or the albumen, which is really the life of the blood, comes through these walls and escapes with the urine; in other words the nerve action is entirely wrong, and instead of taking the poison out of the blood the life of the blood is taken out and the poison remains.

LAWTON'S VEGETABLE COMPOUND,

By its immediate action upon these vital organs thoroughly cleanses, renovates and restores them to their normal condition.

Palatable as Milk.

Pleasant to the Taste.

GRANITE STATE PROVIDENT ASSOCIATION.

The question of homes and the methods of procuring them is one of the most vital that men have to deal with. The great mass of our people struggling under limited incomes are obliged to use economy in almost all directions to save out of their earnings sufficient to be of much benefit to them in acquiring the same. Co-operative banks have been the result of the workings of public spirited men of the past; and their step has been "improved," making the accumulations of small savings valuable in the application toward certain specific objects, is a boon to any community. The Granite State Provident Association has made this improvement, and its plan which is unique in its originality, is certainly valuable in its action and is worthy of the consideration of all. Call or send for information if you want to get a home, pay off a mortgage, or desire a safe and profitable investment, as we offer much better terms than any other association CAN, or than any bank or capitalist WILL.

—Mr. W. H. Mendell accompanied the excursion of the boards of trades of the Merrimack valley to Pine Island, 7 miles above Lawrence on the Merrimack river Wednesday of this week. A fine dinner was partaken of on the island.

—Ex-Alderman Grant is circulating a petition which will ask for a widening of Walnut street, in anticipation of a reduced highway area, provided the city council grants a franchise to a street railway company. In other words it is a plan to beat the railway scheme.

—The New England Telephone Company has established a pay station in J. T. Hill's carriage office, of which Miss Sarah Hill will be in charge. It will prove a convenience to citizens who will be enabled to secure the service of the several telephone lines.

—The B. & A. R. R. counsel spoke recently before the city fathers reconstituting against granting any street railway company the right to cross over the former company's tracks on Walnut street owing to the great danger to life, and still the Boston & Albany is contented with one gateman at one of the most dangerous crossings in the city.

—Wa-amon league 5, Improved Order Red Men, held an important meeting in Tremont Hall, Monday evening. The following were elected trustees: J. G. Kilburn, Alexander Griswold and Luke Ashley, to serve respectively 30 months, 18 months and 6 months. The subject of equipments for the military branch was considered and other matters discussed relative to perfecting the organization.

Ten candidates were initiated. The league will be one of the leading secret fraternal societies of the city.

—The decease of Dr. Willard Everett Smith, a well known physician and a former resident of Newtonville, occurred Monday morning at his home, 21 Concord square, Boston, after an eight days' illness from peritonitis. Dr. Smith was a graduate of the Harvard Medical school some 10 years since. He first located for practice in Framingham Centre, marrying his wife, Miss Newell, there. A few years ago he removed to Boston where he was successfully established. The news of his death will be received with sincere regret in this community.

—Rev. George Butters preached on Sunday morning from the text, "Truly the stone which was rejected by the builders has become the head of the corner." 2 Corinthians 12:12. It being the day marking the one hundredth anniversary of the preaching of Jesse Lee, the itinerant leader of Methodism, under the old elm on Boston Common. The speaker described his personal appearance, spoke of his magnetism, his physical strength enabling him to endure wonderfully the work of two men. His liberty of thought, his perseverance, his trials and his subsequent triumphs and the success of the movement of which he was the founder. Jesse Lee died in 1816 in the fifty-eighth year of his age and was buried in Mount Olivet cemetery, the spot marked by an elegant marble shaft. Mr. Butters closed with a grand poem, evidently inspired by study of the noble man's life and work and the rich inheritance he left his followers.

—A "frugal repast" was tendered by Capt. S. L. Powers to the members of the team No. 6 at the Newton club house, Wednesday evening, in memory "of a lost cause" and in commemoration of their skill and valor in the recent tournament. An elegant dinner was served by Steward Welch in the club dining room, the menu including a delightful variety of choice and dainty viands, well cooked and well served. The "bill of fare" was a humorous and poetic creation, the toasts and remarks being reserved for the evening. Remarks were made by the host and the other members of the team, Messrs. E. H. Pierce, J. L. Richards and C. A. Cunningham. The dinner was a great success and the members of the club certainly take a philosophical idea of defeat and gathered encouragement from the material festivities. It will be in the next season. The writer's authority for this statement is derived from the words of the parting ode, closing the after dinner features from which these lines are culled: "Good-bye past, welcome future; Number Nine may keep its power; Number Six is in the field, its motto: 'Death before we yield.' "So here's to the unfortunate past, And here's to team Number Nine, And here's to the dead easy task of beating that team next time."

The attendance was very good, two applications were received and approved, one by the committee on entertainment reported, showing a gain of about $40 from the strawberry festival held in K. of H. Hall, June 30th. Arrangements were made by vote of the camp for participation in the national parade, August 12th, in which some 10,000 sons will be in line. Details will be furnished by different camps in duty in Boston the whole of the week, and a detail of some ten or twelve men will be dispatched by Camp 100.

—John Armitage, residing on Pine street, was the victim of an unprovoked assault Monday evening, the scene being made by night, and was lashed down stairs by hearing parties knocking at his front door. When he opened the door Thomas and Michael Manning stepped within, and proceeded to beat him with a stick, made by pretty rough treatment, a bad cut over the eye being his most serious wound. It is said that the assault was due to a desire to punish Armitage for some imaginary offense, in which his privilege in carrying the "girl" he liked were brought into question. The police were notified, and Officers Harlow, J. J. Davis and Quilty were dispatched to the scene of the row. Officer Quilty was endeavoring to arrest Michael Manning when he was struck in the face and obliged to use his club. When Michael arrived at the station Dr. Crockett took two stitches in a scalp wound, the result of the blow from the officer's stick. In court, Tuesday morning, Michael and his brother Thomas were each sentenced to 30 days in the house of correction for the assault. They were also fined $10 and costs each for a disturbance of the peace.

—The group picture taken at Lee's by E. Waldron Smith of the recent coaching party to the Cape of Good Hope, has proved a great success, much to the delight of the young participants in that enjoyable occasion, who desired a souvenir of the "outing."

but was under too great headway to be subdued. Six horses, eight fine milch cows, together with wagons, harnesses, farming tools and a large quantity of hay, were burned, the total loss amounting to $5000, but well insured. The fire was undoubtedly of incendiary origin, probably the work of tramps.

—The 1880 salon picture of Mr. Henry Orne Ryder of Auburndale, "Farm-Houses in Brittany," (canvas, 40x60 inches), of which some very good things have been said by prominent French artists, and whose trees were likened by one critic to Corot's work, has been temporarily hung in the Lassell Seminary art gallery, where it will doubtless attract many who wish to see a work on which our young fellow-townsmen has a right to be congratulated, his most considerable painting up to that time. Of his smaller works the seminary owns one, Mr. E. L. Pickard one, Mr. C. S. Roberts one, Mr. C. C. Burr one, Mr. H. A. Thordike several. Mr. Ryder had a picture well ranked in this year's salon. This picture is for sale and will be gladly shown at all times except evenings.

—There is considerable indignation expressed by our citizens relating to the city's action in cutting off the watering cart from here. As this is an unusually dry period the dust arising from the streets is annoying to all traveling. Citizens claim the assessments levied to defray one-half the expenses of the cart, are altogether too high and use to pay such a tax. The matter will no doubt be settled in a short time, but not until everybody has seen enough dust for one season.

—The mills of the Rice Paper Co., were disposed of by auction sale last Thursday, being purchased by a Mr. Corbett, a whole sale rag dealer of Boston, for $11,800, which is not considered very high, taking the mill privileges and adjoining property into consideration. At the opening of the sale the property was divided into two purchases being made by D. O'Brien and Daniel Warren, but as the amounts from these sales seemed insignificant, the sales were closed off and property sold as above stated.

INSIGHT.

On the river of life, as I sit along
I see with the eyes of the soul
That man a yea-nayous we of wrong
Has root in a seed of right.
For evil is good that has gone astray,
And sorrow is only blindness,
And the world is always under the sway
Of a changeless law of kindness.
The commonest error a truth can make
Is shouting the sweet voice hoarse,
And sin is only the soul's mistake
In misdirecting its force.
And love, the fairest of all fair things
That ever to men descended,
Grows rank with nettles and poisonous things
Unless it is watched and tended.
There could not be anything better than this
In the world in the way it began,
And though some matters have gone amiss
From the great original plan;
And however dark the skies may appear,
And however souls may blunder,
I tell you it all will work out clear,
For good lies over and under.
—Ella Wheeler Wilcox.

ON THE BLUFF.

BY JOHN HAY.

O grandly flowing river!
O silver-gliding river!
The springing water shiver
In the sunset of old;
They shiver in the silence
Of the willow-whitened islands,
While the sun bars and the sand bars
Fill air and wave with gold.
O gay, oblivious river!
O sunset-kindled river!
Do you remember ever
The eyes and smiles so blue
On a summer day that shone here—
When we were all alone here,
And the blue eyes were too wise
To speak the love they knew?
O stern, impassive river!
O still, unanswerable river!
The shivering water shiver
The night-wind is moan and rave,
From the past a voice is calling,
From Heaven a star is falling,
And dew falls in the bluebell
Above her hillside grave.
—Washington Post.

PUNCTUAL TO A DOT.

The trouble began as soon as we were married—nay, even before I had been engaged to Charles long enough to learn his weaknesses pretty well, and as our wedding day approached I began to tremble.

"Charles," I said, as we parted the night before, "don't be late to-morrow, whatever you do."

"Good heavens, Lelia! what do you take me for?" said Charles. "If ever a man was ready for anything—"

"Which you never were since I knew you," I said. "I believe you would manage to be late to your own funeral."

"That would not depend quite so much upon my own volition," said Charles, laughing. "Make your mind easy, little woman; I shall be in time."

I was by no means convinced of it, but I could say no more. At first I had thought of being married in the English style, but I did not fancy the idea of waiting at the chancel rails for Charles. The only safe thing seemed to be to secure him before we left the house.

Two o'clock was the hour fixed for the wedding, and as the time approached, of course I was in a turmoil. I was sure that the hair-dresser was late, but Aunt Fan convinced me that the appointed hour had not yet arrived. He came promptly on the stroke of the clock, and then all was hurry and worry until my toilet was completed. I was ready, from the spray of orange blossom which fastened my veil to the rosette on my slipper; but Charles had not come.

"It's too bad," I said. "He promised so faithfully to be in time. Do send somebody to look him up."

"Dear child!" cried Aunt Fan, in a tone, "whatever you do don't try. But the cheeks are all very well for a bride, but blushing eyes are a decided mistake. There is plenty of time. It is only half-past one."

"But he might be here," I cried. "I am ready, and why isn't he? It's too bad."

One great tear splashed down upon the broached satin of my dress. That frightened me, and I resolutely repressed the spot, while Aunt Fan carefully dried the rest with her lace handkerchief. It was completely effaced, but still Charles had not come. Then I fell into a stony despair.

"He won't come at all," I said. "There will be no wedding, and I shall be the laughing stock of everybody."

"My dear Lelia," said Aunt Fan, "we are not in England. You can be married at any time, and it is not too late."

"But just on the stroke," I said. "Just then the cuckoo clock shouted out its two absurd notes. A moment afterward the door-bell rang, and Charles walked in calm and composed as if I had not been enduring agonies."

"Charles! Charles! how could you?" I cried, and then I saw the key slip to keep back the tears which rushed to my eyes.

"What is it?" said Charles, looking utterly bewildered.

Instead of looking ashamed, when he understood the state of affairs, he began to laugh. "My dear child, the clock was striking two as I came up the steps, I said I would be in time, and I am."

The wedding journey was not a period of unalloyed bliss for me. Charles never missed a train or a boat, but he was never more than just in time, so that I was kept in constant terror. To the hours for meals he paid not the slightest attention. When I reminded him of them, he merely inquired whether I was hungry. If I could not say that I was, he laughed and said, "Then why hurry? what is the use of being in a hotel if we cannot take our own time?" As if punctuality were not a virtue in itself.

It was a relief to me when we came home, and settled down at last to begin life in earnest. We had one little quarrel about the furnishing of our house. I wanted a clock in every room, and when Charles decided to object.

"Time was made for slaves," he said. "Why should I be constantly reminded of my bonds? When I am down town, I must be punctual and energetic and a score of other things. I come home for relaxation, and I want to forget all my noyances. Have a clock in the kitchen, by all means, and put one, if you choose, in the servants' bedroom. For the rest, we have our watches, and what possible need have we for more?"

I yielded, but I made up my mind then which of Charles's faults was likely to give me the most trouble.

Charles was always good-natured; I will say that for him. On the whole, though, I am not sure that that was not the most aggravating part of it. I always made a point of being ready before the time, when we were going anywhere, hoping that my silent example would have its effect, but it was of no use.

"What! going already, little woman?" Charles would say. Then, pulling out his watch, and looking at it, "Oh, we need not start for an hour yet; plenty of time."

Then he would throw himself into a chair, and rattle away about anything or nothing, while I felt myself growing more and more nervous every minute. I had made up my mind that nothing should induce me to quarrel with him—quarreling is at once foolish and vulgar—and I never did. As the time drew on, however, I would say, "Charles, ought you not to be getting ready?"

"Oh, there's no hurry," was the invariable reply—time enough. At last, however, he would rouse himself, look at his watch, yawn, stretch, and then rise slowly from his chair.

"That bonnet is very becoming. I suppose that is why you like to wear it so long," he said, on one such occasion. Then he went out of the room laughing, and I heard him moving about overhead in the deliberate way which nearly drove me frantic.

The worst of it was that he always did manage to be just in time. If I could only have convicted him of being just late for once, I should have had something to fall back upon in our arguments, but as it was I had nothing to take hold of.

Things had gone on in this way for two or three months. I did not suppose that Charles cared, or, indeed, saw, how I fretted about it, and I tried hard to hide my irritation, for I really loved him, and did not wish to annoy, still less to alienate him, but I suppose that my efforts were in vain. We were talking about a reception to which we were going in the evening, and I said:—

"Now, Charles, dear, won't you be ready in time, just for once? You do make me waste so much time waiting for you."

Charles laughed as usual, and was going to make one of his careless retorts, but he stopped suddenly.

"We have been married four months, haven't we, Lelia?" he said.

"Four months to-day," I said promptly. "It was the 8th of August, and this is the 8th of December."

"And in all that time you have not been able to cure me of my dreadful fault? Poor little girl! Your hair will be gray in a year, at this rate. I'm going to try the effect of turning over a new leaf, and see how we both like it."

I did not know exactly what he meant then, but I began to understand when he went into his dressing room the moment I suggested it. He came out fully equipped, even to his gloves, before I had half finished dressing.

"No hurry, Lelia," he said, looking in as he passed. "I only wanted to let you know that I am ready whenever you are."

Of course I had to hurry after that, but as I always hurried anyhow, it did not make very much difference. Charles said nothing except, "The carriage is at the door," when I came down. Of course, after all the fuss I had made, I could not say that it was too early to go, though I knew very well that it was, and was quaking inwardly all the way.

"Don't you think it would be pleasant to drive around by Washington square?" I said, in desperation.

"Washington square!" exclaimed Charles. "Are you mad, Lelia? Why not by Philadelphia at once? Washington square is miles out of our way!"

As if that was not just my object! I could not explain myself, however, so I kept still, and we drove to our destination by the shortest route. Of course, the house was dark when we reached it, the hostess entirely unprepared to receive us, and the waiter who let us in equally surprised and contemptuous at our untimely arrival. Of course, we had the pleasure of spending a solitary hour, I in the ladies' and Charles in the gentlemen's dressing room, before we dared descend. Even then we were among the earliest guests.

"I begin to feel the reward of virtue already," sighed Charles, as we descended the stairs. "How nice it is to be early! The carriage is ordered for one, and I'll be sure to be ready."

He was—and I was not. I had met an old friend, and we were in the middle of a most interesting conversation. She was a New York en passant, and I should not see her again. It was very provoking to be obliged to break off in the middle of our talk; but how could I tell Charles that I was not ready, when he stood waiting with that air of conscious virtue? It was beyond my powers, and absurd as it may seem, I had to say good-bye to Annie and go.

I had not supposed at first that Charles's reformation was permanent, but as the days went on, I was forced to confess that it looked very much as if it were. Promptly as the clock struck six in the evening he entered the house; promptly as it struck nine in the morning he left it. No entreaties could detain him an instant beyond this time.

"No, Lelia, my dear," was his invariable reply, "I have already wasted too much of my life by unpunctuality. You have convicted me of my error. Why revive it, to undo the good which you have done?"

Of course, such sentiments ought to have delighted my heart, and they did in a measure. Only in a measure, however, I must confess, for I began to think that we should be known everywhere as "the early birds." It was never necessary to urge Charles to get ready for anything. We were always the first in church; we were waiting at the doors of operas and theatres long before they were open; at parties or receptions it was our invariable custom to spend from half an hour to an hour in the dressing room, in order to descend with the earliest guests. And Charles was continually expatiating on the sweet reward of virtue, and thanking me for teaching him the beauty of punctuality. I spent myself in vain wonderings as to how long this state of things was to last; but of course it came to a climax finally.

My oldest and most intimate friend, Tina Verringer, was to be married, and Charles and I had vowed in the most solemn manner to attend the wedding. Tina lived at Montclair, and it was, of course, that the ceremony was to take place.

"Do you think that nine o'clock will be early enough to leave here?" asked Charles meekly.

"Nine o'clock! My dear Charles, she is not to be married until one, and Montclair is only an hour away."

"I know," said Charles, "but I was anxious to be in time. I think we had better start at nine, to make sure."

I swallowed my astonishment as I best could, and submitted. It was not a pleasant day. If I were not afraid of exaggerating, I should say that it was a decidedly unpleasant one, being cold and rainy, damp and chilly, with that chilliness which goes straight through to your bones. Already a few stray snow-flakes were fluttering down, giving promise of a settled storm later in the day.

The depot at Hoboken is not a specially exhilarating place to wait in; but Charles settled himself comfortably with his back upon one of the straight-up-and-down settees, saying, "We need not take too early a train, but it is well to be on hand, even if we do reach Montclair too soon; we can walk about and see the place, you know."

Walk about and see the place on such a day? I said nothing, but I inwardly decided that we would not take too early a train. At least we were warm and sheltered where we were, and who knew what we might find at the other end? While I was settling this point in my own mind, the door at the end of the room was flung open, and Charles sprang to his feet.

"Come," he said. "We might as well make sure of this train, after all; and before I could find words in which to couch my objections without giving the lie to all the fixed principles of my life, we were in the cars."

Charles was buried in his newspaper, and I was gazing from the window upon the fast whitening meadows, when the conductor passed before us with a demand for "tickets." They were ready to hand, but the conductor gazed upon them blankly.

"Where are you going?" he asked briefly.

"Montclair," replied Charles, with equal brevity.

"Wrong train. Yours left ten minutes later from the other door. You'd better get out at Newark, and take it there. If you miss it, there'll be another along in forty minutes."

"It is fortunate that we have plenty of time," said Charles to me, as the conductor left us. "Aren't you glad that I have reformed in regard to punctuality?"

"Oh, very glad," I said with a slight tinge of irony, and added inwardly, "especially if it leads you to take the wrong train rather than wait for the right one."

We got out at Newark and took the next train that came along. Being the next, we made sure that it must be the right one; but it wasn't. That train landed us at Orange, where we spent a quiet hour before another Newark bound train picked us up.

"You see, dear," said Charles, "I go upon your principle of always being in time. If we keep on taking the first train that comes along, we shall be sure to get there some time—if not in time for the wedding, then, perhaps in time for the funeral of all the family."

"We shall certainly not be in time for the wedding," I said. "I said half laughing and half crying, 'Suppose, by way of variety we try the effect of taking the last train?'"

"What! and abandon principle? Never!" cried Charles. "However, I think we will inquire before we try again."

We did inquire, but with the result of finding that the next train which it would be possible for us to take would not reach Montclair until half an hour after the time set for the wedding.

"Shall we try it?" asked Charles, cheerfully. "The wedding may be delayed, but we shall know the room may be unpunctual, or something."

I fairly broke down at that. "No, we will not," I said. "I don't want to go dragging in just at the tail of the ceremony. I'm cold and tired and wretched, and I want to go home."

So we said and we did, and I said, but I was more than that. I was thoroughly indignant, for I was sure that Charles had done it all on purpose. Though I had a hidden consciousness that I deserved a lesson of some kind, I thought that he had punished me too severely.

So we left at nine and reached Montclair when we were sitting together in the evening. Charles was too busy with pencil and paper to take any notice, though.

"Lelia," he said, sudden ly.

"What is it?" I answered, rather sulkily.

"I am thoroughly convinced now," said Charles, "that punctuality is the king of all virtues, the crowning merit of humanity; but doesn't it strike you as rather an expensive one?"

"How so?" I asked, melting a little, but not much.

"Well, I won't speak of today, for that was not a fair test. I know you think that I made all those blunders on purpose, but I didn't. I suppose the intoxication of such unusual virtue flew to my head, and muddled my wits, for I certainly made uncommon hash of the matter. I let you go in a huff, according to your ideas, for a month, and I have just been making a little computation of the result. I began to practice the virtue on the night of Mrs. Lee's reception, I believe? Very well. We each spent a solitary hour in the dressing-room, and I suppose, may fairly be considered wasted. I've hours to begotly with. We went to the opera an hour too early (though our seats were engaged) on two occasions—six hours. Theatre, ditto, twice—four hours. Six and four are ten, and two make twelve. Really, my dear Lelia, punctuality is a noble virtue, but it is a very expensive one."

"How so?" I asked, melting a little, but not much.

A Club Car.

Among the pleasures of suburban life in plainfield, which is a New Jersey resort affected by New York business men, is a club car attached to one of the morning and one of the evening trains, by which the members of this temporary travelling organization go back and forth to their daily occupations. It costs an admission by vote and $20 a year, over the regular fare to enjoy the privilege of the luxuries thus provided. People who have much experience with suburban trains will no doubt agree that it is worth the money, says the Boston Post.

Words cannot express the gratitude which people feel for the benefit done them by the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. Long-standing cases of rheumatism yield to this remedy, when all others fail to give relief. This medicine thoroughly expels the poison from the blood.

A Pleading Sense.

Of health and strength renewed, and of ease and comfort follows the use of Syrup of Figs, as it acts in harmony with nature to effectually cleanse the system when costive or bilious. For sale in 50c. and $1.00 bottles by all leading druggists.

The midsummer edition of the popular "Baby Pathfinder Railway Guide" was issued Monday morning. This little Guide contains all the summer changes on every transportation line in New England, making it an invaluable pocket companion for travelers. To meet the demand for the next few weeks the editions will be continuous, as upwards of 50,000 copies per month are sold during the season of pleasure travel.

"Don't you worry yourself about this job, Mrs. Bowser. I wasn't born alongside of a luckleberry man."

Just before noon he got a hang on both doors, and as I looked at them from the hall I had to sit down on the floor and laugh. They didn't meet in the centre within two inches and each was half an inch short at top and bottom. He had also hung them with the cloth on the inside, and then a neighbor came along and turned into the steps. After looking at the doors for half a minute in great astonishment, he queried:—

"Something just from Paris, Bowser?"

"What do you mean?"

"Why you've got a new idea in screen doors. I suppose the space at the bottom is for bugs, that at the top is for quitoes, and the centre for flies. I see you have left the frames exposed. They will make capital roosting places for horselies and pinch bugs. Did you do this job?"

—Mr. Conrad Decker of Oak Hill was unable for some two weeks to attend to his farm business, in consequence of stepping upon a common sewing needle. He has now nearly recovered. Mr. Decker has lost two valuable cows from his fine herd this season.

—List of advertised letters: Mr. H. A. Blodge, Mrs. Harriet L. Cole, Miss Harriet Fenell, Mr. E. Francis, Miss Mary S. Fuller, Miss Kittie A. Mahoney, Miss Kate C. Mahoney, Mary H. O'Connor, Mr. Edward Phillips, Mary A. A. Shea, Henry I. Thomas, Mrs. Isaac Weatherhead.

—Dr. J. J. Noble has returned from a few days at his cottage at Marion, leaving his family there. His boat is there this season, and in a sail of 20 miles the other day Mrs. Noble flung out a line and caught her first fish—a blue fish measuring two feet in length.

—Miss Jennie C. Clark of Beacon street gave a very pleasant lawn party on Monday last. Miss Clark was aided in receiving and entertaining by Miss Daisy Leath-erbee and Miss Sadie Sanborn. The grounds were made bright by Chinese lanterns, and music helped the young people to enjoy the hours.

—Colonel Henry Lee and Hon. Leverett Saltonstall, of Chestnut Hill, with their families, left July 15, for the new resort in Maine's Vineyard, "West-Clough," in which they have taken an active interest, and which they predict will be one of the foremost summer homes of the "Four Hundred" in a few years.

—An alarm was rung in from box 9, at 2:55 o'clock yesterday afternoon, for a fire in the barn of M. A. Miek, situated on Dedham street, in the Oak Hill district. The building was burned to the ground together with its contents, 12 cows, one horse, six pigs, 30 tons of hay, several farm wagons and a number of harnesses. The insufficient water supply, there being no hydrants in the vicinity, prevented the firemen from saving the building. Two of Mr. Miek's children were playing in the barn and were nearly suffocated by the smoke, being rescued by their sister, a young girl about 13 years of age. The cause of the fire is unknown. The total loss is $2500; insurance $1000.

—Fred Hovey has been hard at work this week in the Horace Partridge & Co. tennis tournament at Manchester-by-the-Sea, and has done some fine playing, beating R. C. Eastman, 6-0, 6-4 in the first round in singles. The first match in the second round between Hovey, who is looked upon by many as the winner of the tournament, and George Smith of Longwood club, was quite exciting and well played. In the first set vantage games were necessary; but in the second set Hovey played so well and Smith so poorly that the former had a walkover. Hovey's play was close to the net, where he could smash all easy balls, while Smith played in the back of the court most of the time. Volleys and half volleys were frequent from both players, and Smith did particularly well in his attempts at lobbing. Hovey beat 6-3, 6-1. On Thursday in the first prize contest between Manchester and Longwood, Hovey was again victorious, this time beating George Smith, 6-3, 6-4. After having defeated Manchester, Brown was looked upon as a possible conqueror of Hovey in the third round, but his hard battle of the morning left him rather weak to tackle Hovey, who is strong and seldom tired, and he beat 6-2, 6-0 in the third round. The first match of the afternoon, Thursday, was the second match of the semi-finals between Hovey and E. L. V. Hoppin. Hovey was in his element, for he smashed and volleyed in his old-time form. Score, 3-1. Hovey won the fifth and sixth. Then Hoppin won the seventh and eighth, score, 5-3, and Hovey beat Hoppin, 6-3, 6-4. Hovey was in his element, for he smashed and volleyed in his old-time form. Score, 3-1. Hovey won the fifth and sixth. Then Hoppin won the seventh and eighth, score, 5-3, and Hovey beat Hoppin, 6-3, 6-4.

—Members of the 6th, 7th and 8th generations of Woodwards are now living in the Woodward house off Woodward street, Newton Highlands. There is evidence that a part of the present house was there two hundred and forty years ago. The old walls are 18 inches in thickness, filled in with large brick about 10 inches by 5. The little bright-eyed boys of the 8th generation look as if they might "hold the fort" for other generations to come.

—Considerable amusement and at times great trouble is caused in the delivery of telegraph messages, which are to be paid by the receiver, to a few here to whom the telegraph is a new thing as far as their personal experience goes. They invariably wish to read their message before paying for it, and as for paying for the message that is absurd, and it takes a deal of patience to stand the eloquent abuse hurled at one's head by the more out-spoken ones.

A Good Movement.

The starting of the new association of soldiers of the late war under the name of the Veterans Patriotic League, which is reported from the city of Newton, is most commendable, says the Boston Herald. It vindicates the disinterestedness of those who compose it, and protests against the efforts now making to secure pensions without regard to the needs of those who receive them.

The purpose of the organization is excellently set forth in its declaration of belief. It is succinctly condensed into the position that pensions should be confined to those who have suffered in health or in the capacity to obtain a living by the war, and the idea of patriotic service having been rendered under the expectation or with the claim of compensation beyond this is repudiated. Here is a good platform for high-minded men in the service, and the announcement of it at the present time is appropriate.

Cure for Hydrophobia.

Mr. George I. Goodwin of Jefferson street found the following the other day among some old papers belonging to his father, who was a physician with a large practice. It was copied by him from a Canada paper.

Take three tablespoonfuls of oyster shell lime powder and sift through book muslin, add egg enough to give it a consistency of soft dough, fry it in a little fresh butter or olive oil. Let the patient eat this cake in the morning and abstain from food or drink six hours. This repeated three mornings in succession is in all cases.

The writer says that in twenty-five years he has not known a fatal case of hydrophobia where this has been faithfully used.

An incongruity: Mr. Fig—What are you thinking over so deeply, my dear?

Mrs. Fig—I was just wondering whether to cut off Tommy's curls or to make him stop swearing.—Terre Haute Express.

Acertain doctor of divinity, after preaching at his old home, was complimented by an old colored man: "You's a good preacher, you's a good preacher, you's a 30 ending brass and tinkling simbal."

NEWTON STREET RAILWAY.

SUCCESSFUL TRIAL TRIPS OF THE ELECTRIC CARS.

The first trip of an electric car over the route of the Newton Street Railway Company was made Tuesday morning.

The car, of the open pattern, furnished with a double Thomson-Houston motor, was operated by Electrician Willard S. Duckett, assisted by Mr. H. E. Southwick.

After leaving the car house and switching onto the main line the car proceeded through Newtonville to Newton, the only delay at all being caused by the poor condition of the track. The car returning from Newton went direct to the Waltham stables, stopping at the factory to take passengers. Many passengers got into the car without knowing but that its motive power was the same as usual.

Among those who enjoyed the trip were: President Morse, Superintendent Henderson, Assistant Superintendent Taylor, Chief of Fire Department, Henry Bixby, Assistant Handlett, the officers of the car, Mr. Henderson's two daughters, and about twenty-five interested citizens of Newton.

The second trip was made yesterday morning, the city officials of Newton accompanying the directors and officers of the street railway company. The car left the square at Newtonville about 8 o'clock, came to Newton and then returned over the route to Waltham, coming back to Newton again, where it arrived about 10.20. At the car house, West Newton, a stop was made, an opportunity given to inspect the new building. It is a model car house, the original plan of which was sketched by Superintendent Henderson and perfected by Samuel Patch, architect. The dimensions of the building, which was constructed by H. F. Ross, are 155x80 feet. In the car room there are five tracks, over which extend the trolley wires. A transfer table is so arranged that the cars can be moved on any track desired. On one side of the car room, a pit has been constructed under the tracks in order to facilitate the work of oiling and cleaning the motors.

On either side of the car room, in the wings of the building, there are several apartments, consisting of the main office and waiting room, superintendent's office, stock rooms, toilet room, and drivers' and conductors' waiting room. There is also a stable with accommodations for 6 horses and a substantial wash room and repair shop. The arrangements and construction of the building are first class in its details. The cost of the new car house was in the vicinity of $10,000.

The new rolling stock comprises 4 handsome open and 4 box cars, furnished with the Edison and incandescent lamps. The additional rolling stock comprises the cars used formerly on the West Newton and Waltham line, 8 in number, and in good serviceable condition. The weight of the electric car with motor is about 4 tons. The motors and trucks were furnished by the Thomson-Houston Company, and the cars were built by the Newburyport Car Company. The new car house will be lighted by gas. The piping for the gas fixtures and the planing was done by W. H. French & Co. The cars were fitted up under the direction of W. S. Duggett and the overhead wiring was superintended by H. E. Southwick of the Thomson-Houston Electric Company.

The trip yesterday morning was very successful, the car moving over the rails at a fair rate of speed, and without any set backs of any kind. Among those who enjoyed the ride with the street railroad officials were Aldermen: W. H. French, Col. Kingsbury, City Treasurer Kenney, Asst. City Auditor Fleu, City Marshal Richardson, Nathan Mosman, John B. Goodrich, Robert Harrison, R. M. Lucas, W. B. Thomas of the Globe, W. W. Wood of the Graphic, E. L. Lemon of the Herald and others.

Regular trips on schedule time will not be made until the arrival of a 300-horse power Armstrong & Simms engine, which will be located at the works of the Waltham Gas Light Co., the street railroad authorities having contracted with that company to furnish power for the new engine now located at Waltham is of insufficient power, and regular trips, therefore, cannot be made until the new engine is placed in position.

The electric cars are now running on hour time, leaving West Newton at 6 a. m. and leaving Newton on the half hour, the last car leaving Newton at 4.30 p. m. They are obliged to stop at this time because the Waltham Gas Light Co., who furnish them with power, are obliged to furnish power for the electric lights at Waltham during the night, and cannot serve both parties at the same time. The new engine was to have been delivered prior to June 1st, but the company are too full of business to keep their contract, and now promise the engine about the first of August.

The most novel device in connection with the street cars is the electric fare register. The conductor simply presses the buttons arranged above the cornice and the mechanical device performs its work in recording the fares. The register was invented by a Newton man, Mr. W. W. Montgomery.

Miss Eames in London.

The Boston Advertiser of Monday morning contained the following notice of interest to Newton people about Miss Emma Eames. She is certainly exceeding the highest expectations of her friends.

"Miss Eames, the American prima donna of the Grand Opera, Paris, was heard for the first time in London at the Metropolitan Theatre on Monday last. She arrived from Paris at 8 p. m., and was met at the station by a note saying that Miss Eames was ill, and would she take her place. She appeared at 11 in Lady Ardilaun's drawing room, which was crowded with smart people—an absolute stranger. Five minutes later she had a London reputation. Her voice, her presence and her method captivated this critical company."

Gen. Fisk.

The recent death of Gen. Clinton B. Fisk brings out many incidents in his life. Among others is the following from the N. Y. Independent: "One of the last public appearances of General Fisk was at the anniversary of the National Temperance Society. Being called upon just after Dr. Talmage had spoken, he made one of his bright, witty speeches, in which he explained why Professor Price, the colored orator, was absent. He found some consolation, he said, for the absence of Ham in the fact of the presence of Shem and Japheth, in the person of Dr. Talmage."

Simple Remedies For Minor Accidents.

There are minor accidents liable to occur at any time, which, if promptly treated, may prevent serious results. A burn or scald is always painful, but the pain can be instantly relieved by the use of bicarbonate of soda or common baking powder (saleratus). Put two teaspoonfuls of soda in a half a cup of water. Wet a piece of linen cloth in the solution and lay it on the burn. The pain will disappear as if by magic. If the burn is deep so that the skin has peeled off, dredge the dry soda directly on the part affected.

For a slight cut there is nothing better to control the hemorrhage than common unglazed brown paper, such as is used by market men and grocers; a piece to be bound over the wound.

Nosebleed, if not in excess, should not be checked. It is nature's remedy for relieving congestion. It sometimes, however, passes a healthy limit and demands attention. Put the hands in mustard water, and apply cloths wet with ice water, or vinegar and water, to the forehead and over the nose. In aged persons and those who are great eaters nosebleed indicates a tendency to apoplexy. The bowels should be kept free and the diet regular.

In the summer season it is not an uncommon thing for persons going into the woods to be poisoned by contact with dogwood, ivy or the poison oak. The severe itching and smarting which is thus produced may be relieved by first washing the parts with a solution of saleratus, two teaspoonfuls to a pint of water, and then applying cloths wet with extract of hamamelis. Take a dose of epsom salts internally or a double roche powder.

For a simple fainting fit a horizontal position and fresh air will usually suffice. If a person receives a severe shock caused by a fall or blow, handle carefully without jarring. A horizontal position is best. Loosen all tight clothing from the throat, chest and waist. If the patient can swallow, give half a teaspoonful of aromatic spirits of ammonia in a little water. If that cannot be procured give whiskey or brandy and water. Apply warmth to the feet and bowels.

In cases of sunstroke or extreme exhaustion from the effect of heat use cloths wrung out of ice water to head, neck and chest. Give ten or fifteen drops of aromatic spirits of ammonia every fifteen minutes. Never give any alcoholic stimulants.

For a bee sting use ammonia, wet salt or a slice of an onion.

If a child is taken with convulsions place it in a warm bath. In convulsions can bear the back of your hand (not the palm) pour cold water on the head through a strainer, like a shower bath. Then wrap the child warmly in a blanket, keeping the head cool and the feet warm. If a bath is not at hand and a remedy can be procured, soak a flannel cloth in tincture of aconite and rub over the child's neck, with a dry cloth over it. If an acid poison has been taken give an alkali to counteract it—saleratus or ammonia. Then give an emetic of mustard and water or salt and water. If the poisoning is from opium, morphine or laudanum, after using the emetic give strong coffee and keep the patient awake by walking.

Mr. Blaine Smashing China.

[Boston Herald.] It would have been difficult for human ingenuity to devise a statement in a single sentence more likely to hurt the Republicans in the important congressional elections now at hand than Mr. Blaine's embodied in his assertion that "There is not a section or line in the entire bill (the tariff bill of Mr. McKinley) that will open a market for another bushel of wheat or another barrel of pork." A disgusted Republican member of congress says that Mr. Blaine is like a bull in a china shop in this action. A member of the committee of ways and means declares that "it can have no other effect than to discourage all efforts at tariff legislation for this session." It seems altogether likely either to prevent such legislation or to punish the party for it, if it is not prevented. And this was pretty certainly Mr. Blaine's object in taking the stand he has.

Mr. Blaine has been the most important leader in the Republican party in the second era of its history, as Mr. Seward and Mr. Chase were its most important leaders in its first era. The indications are very strong that Mr. Blaine is to end his public life in the same manner as did his predecessors, by being gravely out of harmony with that political organization.

How Timothy Grass Was Named.

[Chicago Times.] Timothy or herb grass is the most common grass of continental Europe, growing wild throughout all that vast region between the Mediterranean sea on the south and the North sea in the direction of the north. It is not known exactly when it was first introduced into the United States, but this much is known; it takes its name from Timothy Hanson, a farmer of Maryland, who brought it into general notice as a hay grass after he had cultivated it extensively for his own use for years. The botanical name of the grass is phleum pratense. It is a curious fact that although its native home is in Europe, the United States is the first country in which it was grown, cut and cured for hay. Not longer ago than 1785 some timothy heads and seeds were taken to England and exhibited as curiosities.

She (yawning as she is on the point of striking 12)—"Isn't there a game played with cards in which one goes out and the other stays in?" He—"Yes; it's called p—." She—"Well, let's play it. I'll stay in." He didn't stay long after that.—Norristown Herald.

Merrill—"How is the new university in your city coming on?" Woolly—"Oh, splendidly. The baseball and football grounds are laid out, and the boat house built, and we've secured seven athletic instructors. We're going to hire a man to teach Latin and history and all that, and I expect we'll open with a large class next fall."—West Shore.

"How," says Mrs. Newrich, "can we make the invitations to our ball particularly stylish?" "I'll tell you," answered her husband; "instead of putting two cent stamps on them we'll put ten-centers, eh?"—Philadelphia Times.

Graduate of Yale—"This encyclopedia is very imperfect. I have looked all through the letter 'P' and I don't find a word about 'possum.'" Graduate of Harvard—"It is not worth a continental I've carefully examined the letter 'C' and the slightest allusion is there made to 'coon.'" Vassar Graduate—"Suppose, Uncle George, you look under 'O' and 'R'." Graduate—"Oh!" "Ah!"—Harper's Bazar.

Launch of the Clyde Steamer "Algonquin."

The steamer "Algonquin" was successfully launched at Camp's shipyard, Philadelphia, Saturday afternoon, 19th inst., in the presence of the owners and a large company of invited guests.

The "Algonquin" is the fourth large ship built at Camp's yard during the last three years for Messrs. Wm. P. Clyde & Co.'s New York, Charleston and Florida line. She is of iron, 300 feet long, 43 feet beam, 29 feet depth of hold, 3000 tons measurement, with triple expansion engines and four steel boilers.

Work will be continued upon her in order that her fittings and furnishings may be ready for her to take her place in the line about the first of September and it is safe to say that when she joins the fleet she will be equal, if not superior to any ship in the American coastwise trade. She will be fitted with every modern improvement, supplied with every modern device for safety. Her accommodations for cabin passengers will be ample and it is safe to say she will become as much of a favorite as her sister ships, the "Iroquois," "Cherokee" and "Seminole."

Tri-weekly service of the line will be resumed on August 11th, from which date one of these ships will leave New York every Monday, Wednesday and Friday at 3 p. m., and as it is the only line running first class steamers through to Jacksonville, Fla., there is no doubt that the travel during the coming fall and winter will be largely increased on account of this addition to the fleet.

Those who have taken this trip between Charleston and Jacksonville among the sea islands and along the balmy coast of Georgia on one of these ships need not be told of the pleasure there is in it. Those who have never been do not know what they miss until they try it.

There is a fine old Bourbon tone in the organ outcry against Bishop Potter's "Pessimism" is the organist's name for one who believes in a public conscience to which an appeal can be made against blind subservience to party. The man who scoffs at such an appeal, who declares with Senator Ingalls that the decalog and the sermon on the mount have no application to politics, and who treats his fellow-men as dependents to be driven or chattels to be bought—he is a practical politician after the organ's own heart.—Philadelphia Times.

NEWTON TARIFF REFORM CLUB.

The Tariff is a Humbug.

Every person interested in the subject of the Tariff is cordially invited to take part in the discussion carried on in this column. Every tariff consideration will be given to inquiries, criticisms and communications of every kind whether coming from Tariff Reformers, Free Traders or High Protectionists. Address Secretary of the Tariff Reform Club, Newton Centre, Mass.

One Thing at a Time.

If the republican managers at Washington wished to alienate the sympathy of the mass of the people, it seems as if they could not adopt more effective measures than those which they are trying to pass through congress, or have just passed. The list is startling. It includes the McKinley tariff bill, the elections force bill, the silver bill which President Harrison signed without any compunction, though it was wholly at variance with the principles of his message, the dependent pension bill and the shipping subsidy bill. Added to these is the admission of six states to the Union, when some of them are totally unfit for the rank of states, simply as a political measure for the sake of preventing the United States senate from becoming democratic when the house shall have passed, as the republicans expect, into democratic control. All and each of these acts is an abomination and enough to bring down the condemnation of right minded citizens.

But there is danger that, in the many devices which are taken to befog the great issue, it may become obscured. Hence there should be no overlooking of the chief fact that the campaign this fall is for the election of members of congress who will vote for a reform of the present tariff abominations. That is the one thing which is uppermost now and it ought to be disposed of before any other issue is forced to the front. Great questions cannot be disposed of in bunches. Nations move slowly in their forward progress. One thing at a time is generally the rule and it must be observed in this case. Let the temptation be never so strong to bring in some other question, this right to be kept at the front persistently. Let the people understand that they are to vote this fall on the question whether this high tariff shall be maintained. Let us settle this now and forever. Then we can take up other issues and dispose of them, but we cannot vote on two things at the same time. Vote this fall for tariff reform.

Mr. Blaine's Letter.

Mr. Blaine's letter to Senator Frye has proved of immense importance and it gives an opportunity for men to speak who have either swallowed the McKinley bill in silence or else have praised it in violation of their convictions. As Blaine's position is directly antagonistic to what he held two years ago, the comments of republican papers on it, as given below, are almost as remarkable as the letter itself.

Mr. Blaine's letter on the tariff, in which he suggests an opportunity for opening the markets of forty million of people to the products of American farmers, is of vast public importance, and will command great attention. It is brief and to the point.—Cincinnati Commercial Gazette.

Mr. Blaine's method of protecting the farmer is by opening new markets, which will take his surplus crops, and thus increase the value of all he raises. Were corn brought into this country in immense quantities, Mr. Blaine would put duties on it to protect the farmer. As it is not, he seeks for more markets for surplus corn as the best way of protecting him. "The McKinley have but one medicine, warranted to cure every ailment, and that is high taxation of consumers."—Chicago Tribune.

The Palladium abates not the least its advocacy of a moderate protective tariff, and desires the McKinley bill, when it shall be improved by the Senate, enacted into a law. The Palladium does, however, insist that Mr. Blaine's significant utterances, urging the securing of more foreign markets, should be crystallized into law. To fail to do this, and to fail to bring the bill more into the shape which the people expect and desired, is to give free rein to the agitation which Mr. Blaine notes—an agitation which, if unchecked, has defeat for us in store as surely as night follows the day.—New Haven Palladium.

Mr. Blaine's letter on the sugar duty and our relation to Cuba, which we printed yesterday, is a very strong paper. He has struck out in a line of development of American trade which is full of promise if it can be followed.—Hartford Courant.

Mr. Blaine holds that the exacting of concessions for the extending of the free list is a necessary part of a wise plan of reciprocity in trade. It is a sound argument.—Syracuse Journal.

As Mr. Blaine says, the present bill is unjust to the American farmer, in that it neglects to guard his interests in foreign markets, although abundant opportunity is offered for a wise plan of reciprocity in trade. It is a sound argument.—Syracuse Journal.

Secretary Blaine points out very clearly some of the great mistakes of recent years in our commercial policy, as a warning against the blunder of admitting sugar free of duty without exacting some concessions from the foreign producers by way of reciprocity.—Pittsburgh Chronicle.

Discriminating Against Home.

It is an undeniable fact that American manufacturers sell at a lower price for export than for American wholesale houses. A communication in the New York Evening Post says:

"The Engineering and Mining Journal publishes once a month an export edition, containing from thirty to forty columns of advertisements of American manufacturers, and giving the prices and the discounts. It is stated, with much significance, in the advertisement that 'the discounts are for exports only.' It will make for the reader a very interesting pastime if he will obtain a copy of the last monthly edition, and compare the prices 'for exports only' with the prices 'for Americans only,' in such cases as he may be able to obtain the latter. Take wrenches, that useful article, found not only in nearly all homes, but absolutely necessary in machine-shops, manufacturing establishments of all kinds, and in the hands of the laboring class. The very best, bedrock, bottom discounts which the largest jobbing houses in the United States, doing business of millions of dollars annually, can get on Coe's knife-handle wrenches, black or bright, are 50, 7 1/2, and 3; yet the Engineering and Mining Journal is advertising publicly that any scrub of a foreigner can buy the same goods 'for export only' and get 55, 10, 7 1/2, and 3 off!"

Other pertinent figures are in this table and it is well to read them. They show that our manufacturers, protected by our tariff, charge their own people more than they do foreigners.

Capital Moving Away.

Oliver Ames and a long list of republican iron manufacturers of New England petitioned congress to reduce the tariff on iron and coal so that they might get cheaper raw material from Canada and so be able to continue in business. But congress was deaf to the petition. Massachusetts senators and representatives sacrificed their constituents for the sake of the party. Senator Hoar, with a blind partisanship, refused to aid his constituents. Hence the Washburn & Moen great wire establishment of Worcester will build a million-dollar plant in Chicago, employing 1000 workmen. They cannot get their raw material east. Transportation is expensive. So they put part of their business in the west. Of his western competitors Mr. Moen says: "We might still have been able to fairly compete with them for some time, however, in the western markets without establishing a western plant, if the tariff had been revised."

How much longer will Massachusetts be represented by politicians and not by statesmen? It is for the people to say.

Minnesota farmers are opening their eyes and are cutting aloof from their old stand-by, the republican party, because they do not believe it is devoted to the public good. In the late state convention of the farmers' alliance with the united labor party, their platform spoke of the McKinley bill as "the crowning infamy of protectionism."

The Washburn & Moen Change.

(From the Providence Journal.) The attempts which are being made to explain away the contemplated transfer of a portion of the Washburn & Moen establishment to the west in the interest of the prohibitive tariff on coal and iron are not very successful. Mr. Moen was one of the signers of the petition of New England iron manufacturers for a reduction of duties on pig iron and coal, and this preparation for removal is an answer to his refusal, in which others will also have to join or go into some other business.

Progress Backward.

Speaking of Senator Aldrich's argument for shutting out foreign trade in order to build up a home market, the New York Evening Post says:

"We are now in the second century of our endeavor to carry this beautiful theory into practice, and are no nearer to its realization than we were in the beginning; in fact, farther away than we were at the start, because the progress of inventing substituting machinery for hand labor is always in the progressive and cumulative stage. Perhaps Mr. Blaine sees that the task of providing months in our own soil for all of our farm products is somewhat Sisyphean, although he has not exactly said so. What he said was that the whole McKinley bill will not make a new market for one bushel of wheat or one barrel of pork. It will be comforting to the masters and elevator men of Oswego and Buffalo to know that Mr. Aldrich is seeking to carry his antiquated notions into effect at their expense by excluding Canadian barley from our markets."

Electric Locomotion.

(From the New York Evening Post.) Considerable discussion is now going on in electrical circles over the problems connected with the application of the electric locomotive to cross-country service. A year or two ago electric rail-roading was restricted to the shorter and smaller street railways of the country, those not exceeding four or five miles in length, and equipped with half a dozen cars. At the present time, however, several of the roads run a length of 10 or 15 miles with ease, and as many as 75 to 100 cars are in operation at the same time, thus demonstrating the ability of the circuits for distribution to carry heavy currents such as would be required for heavy work of this character. The next step is the extension of electric service to steam and suburban roads, and while but a short time ago the idea was looked upon as chimerical, it has now entered the field of practical politics in electricity.

Not only are electrical engineers debating it, but the railroad journals of the country are devoting their space and attention to it, and it is seen that the prospects are infinitely more encouraging than there was reason to suppose, even as recently as six months ago. One of the main objections to the electric locomotive seems to be its increased cost, as compared with the steam locomotive. An electric machine at the rate of $20 per horse-power costs twice as much as a locomotive of equal capacity. This may be true, but it is to be borne in mind that these are still early days for the electric motor, and that the near future promises considerable reduction in the price of such apparatus, especially as it grows into a larger size. But this argument of cost is especially offset by the fact that the electric system promises, and so far has secured, superior economy in the reduction of running expenses for fuel and other purposes. In the case of the horse roads, for instance, the cost of animal power is twice that of electric power, since, in the case of electricity versus steam, the current would be generated by means of stationary engines of the most economical type, as compared with locomotives, which "eat as they go," and naturally use fuel to a degree that leaves a large margin for daily saving. The other considerations in favor of the electric locomotive, it is pointed out, are that a few millions of dollars of property are annually destroyed in this country by sparks from passing locomotives, and in a great many states the smoke and soot from the soft coal is very much of a nuisance. All this, of course, is absent from the electric locomotive, which, while not absolutely silent, gives no other additional sign of its presence and activity save an occasional harmless flashing at its points of contact. The motion with the electric locomotive is also extremely smooth and steady, and one can look out of the car windows without fear of being blinded and blackened with coal grit.

Not Satisfied with His Flannel Shirt.

"Don't talk to me of flannel suits," said a perspiring young fellow as he ran a handkerchief around the inside of the collar of one of the garments he did not want to hear mentioned, and rolled up the sleeves of the same, from where they clung warm and woolly about his wrists. "Flannel shirts are a delusion," he added angrily. "They are absolutely hot. They may be healthy, but they are up my neck and almost scorch me under the arms. Every time they are washed they shrink, till they get as thick as boards, and by winter time I expect they will be about small enough to make admirable chest protectors."

"It seems strange to me that with all the Yankee ingenuity that we hear of going about loose in the country something cool, smooth, light, durable, comfortable, cheap and unshrinkable cannot be invented for summer wear. Silk is too dear for the average man who has to perspire for his living; flannel is too coarse and warm for any but manual toilers, and between them and starched, airtight, sharp edged lined there seems to be no satisfactory alternative."

"There must have been a time when starch was unknown. Men wore linen then, no doubt, and looked well enough in it too. But who would dare appear in a linen shirt now unstarched? Such cowards are we, such slaves to custom! I declare my night shirt, with its loose rolling collar, clean and cool, is the only thing that I know of that seems to fill the bill. I wonder if I sewed a lace ruffle up and down the front of it, put soft lace ruffles on the wrists and a light necktie under the collar, and appeared cool and comfortable with it, at the office, would the boys take me for a lunatic, or would they think I was only masquerading in a Vandyke costume? That's the kind of shirt they wore in those days, I believe, before the era of starch. I've a good mind to try it."—New York Tribune.

White Haired Christina Rossetti.

Christina Rossetti, the sister of the poet, is a lovely, white haired woman now. She lives in Torrington square, quite in that quarter where the Americans find comfortable lodging houses. Miss Rossetti has been very charitable; in fact her charities have exceeded her income to such an extent that she is in comparative poverty now. She has been frantically imposed upon from time to time. I have picked up a number of her letters written to a certain impostor in London, who, pretending to want, wheedled this kindly lady out of many a pound. The letters of the amiable woman, inclosing money to relieve the wretched beggar's alleged wants, are marvellous of pathos, for she speaks of her own poverty. It is hard to conceive how any man could have the heart to prey upon so noble and so unsuspecting a creature. A great many years ago the youthful poems of Miss Rossetti were published privately, and copies of the little book are now in great demand at $35 apiece.—London Cor. Chicago News.

A Poet's Resting Place.

Walt Whitman has chosen a spot for the final disposition of his body when his life is ended. The place is characteristic of the man. It is located in Harleigh cemetery, about a mile from Camden, N. J., and in the prettiest part of the grounds. It is a natural mound, beneath majestic oaks and chestnut trees, while about 200 feet below a stream of water flows over a precipice from an artificial lake. A driveway which leads through the woods winds within a few feet of the spot, and the boughs of the gnarled oaks are spread like arms over the hillock and touch the greensward on the sides. Back of this piece of ground is the woods, where a footpath leads to the entrance gate.—Exchange.

Unhurt by a Plunge Over a Precipice.

Thomas Wiser, while ascending Look-out mountain by the pike, lost a valuable horse, but by almost a miracle a 9-year-old boy was spared from a most dreadful death. The lad, who was sick, was lying asleep on a pillow on the back seat of a one horse wagon, when the horse, at a curve in the narrow road became frightened and leaped off the edge of the precipitous descent. He fell almost a hundred feet, and was injured so badly that he had to be killed. The wagon was smashed into kindling wood. The boy, strange to say, was unhurt save a few slight scratches, and is in better health than for some time past.—Cor. New Orleans Times-Democrat.

Marshal Ney's Daughter Dead.

The death of the Duchesse de Persigny severs one of the very few remaining links between the first and second empires. The late Duc de Persigny succeeded M. de Morny as minister of the interior, and contributed almost as much as his more astute predecessor toward bringing about a revival of Napoleonic ideas. The duchesse (who afterward married the Marquis de Sombreuil) was a daughter of the ill fated Marshal Ney, Prince of Moscow, and played an all important part in the social history of the reign of Napoleon III. Her death at the Villa California, Cannes, was quite unexpected, although she had been in weak health for some time.—London World.

Rapid Work in the Census Office.

A quick piece of work was done by the census office clerks one evening. A circular was printed for distribution to the enumerators. It was set up at 2 o'clock and about 90,000 copies were printed. These were placed in about 45,000 envelopes, addressed to the enumerators, and by 3 o'clock in the morning the entire number, distributed by states and counties, were in the city postoffice. A large force of clerks worked all night to complete the work.—Washington Star.

Edmund Yates writes that 303 elks were shot during last year in the forests of Norway, the majority of them being taken in the district of Namdals, where the forests are let to English tenants. The annual rental returned to the government for these forests is equal to $900,000.

The breath of a chronic catarrh patient is often so offensive that he becomes an object of disgust. After a time ulceration sets in, the spongy bones are attacked and frequently entirely destroyed. A constant source of discomfort is the dripping of the purulent secretions into the throat, sometimes producing inveterate bronchitis, which in its turn has been the exciting cause of pulmonary disease. The brilliant results which have attended its use for years past properly designate Ely's Cream Balm as by far the best and only cure.

Boston, Aug. 26, 1889.
Dr. Solomon has cured a cancer on my lip of seventeen years standing, it was cut out twice by what they call eminent surgeons at intervals of six years, after being cut out each time I knew by the feeling it was still there, and it would be now if I had not been so fortunate as to have Dr. Solomon treat it, he did it without any cutting. I would urge those afflicted with cancer not to delay but to go at once and be cured permanently as I have done. My dear Doctor I thank from the bottom of my heart,

GRANITE STATE PROVIDENT ASSOCIATION.

The question of homes and the methods of procuring them is one of the most vital that men have to deal with. The great mass of our people struggling under limited incomes are obliged to use economy in almost all directions to save out of their earnings sufficient to be of much benefit to them in acquiring the same. Co-operative banks have been the result of the workings of public spirited men of the past; and their step has been "improved," making the accumulations of small savings valuable in the application toward certain specific objects, is a boon to any community. The Granite State Provident Association has made this improvement, and its plan, which is unique, is original with us, of which the above club is a part. To say they have taken a decided step in this direction it is not desired to create the impression that the object of their work is a philanthropic one. But if it does procure a saving or a more economical use of the funds of the people of limited means, it certainly is valuable in its action and is worthy of the consideration of all. Call or send for information if you want to get a home, pay off a mortgage, or desire a safe and profitable investment, as we offer much better terms than any other association CAN, or than any bank or capitalist WILL.

THE NEWTON TRANSCRIPT HAS BEEN CONSOLIDATED WITH THE GRAPHIC

THE SCHOOL SUPERINTENDENT.

The question of a superintendent of schools is the most important one now before our school board, and one which largely involves the future prosperity of our schools. A superintendent has almost unlimited power, and it goes without saying that Newton should only have the best. We could much better afford to do away with one or two ornamental teachers, if that were necessary to raise money sufficient to secure a first class man. A man who would do in a back country town is not the one that should be called here, as the Newton superintendent should have a standing in educational matters equal to that of any other school superintendent in the state. Few of even the larger cities spend any more for their schools than does Newton or have a more elaborate school system.

It would hardly do for the committee to choose a man who is unknown in the educational world, or one without experience and ideas on the subject of education. It would probably be impossible to secure Mr. E. P. Seaver, although he has a deep interest in Newton schools and would do much to benefit them, but the sacrifice involved in leaving his present position would probably be too great. There is, however, a resident of Newton who is admirably qualified for the position, and who, if he could be persuaded to accept it, would restore confidence at once to our whole school system. This gentleman is Mr. Francis A. Waterhouse of Newtonville, who made such an admirable record in our High School, and has since brought up the English High School in Boston to a perfection it never enjoyed before. Such a man is needed at the head of our school system, and the committee might represent to him that it is his duty as a patriot and a citizen, to come to the assistance of our schools and help to make them what Newton schools should be.

The school committee are of course interested in securing the best man possible, and Mr. Waterhouse's name has been suggested by so many citizens, that they might feel certain of doing the popular thing in making every effort to secure him. There would be a great advantage in securing a superintendent who was already familiar with Newton schools, who had had experience in them and knows their needs better than any stranger could, even after a year's experience. The position of superintendent has grown to be of such importance in Newton, that the selection of a thoroughly competent man becomes of the first importance, and it goes without saying that such a man should be thoroughly posted on all educational matters, and at the same time command the confidence and respect of both teachers and pupils. Mr. Waterhouse seems to fill all the requirements.

NEWTON'S POPULATION.

A letter from Supervisor Wadlin states that an approximate estimate of the population of Newton is 24,375. These figures are not, however, official, and the final count made at Washington may vary somewhat. The figures certainly prove that Newton has made a substantial growth since ten years ago, when the population was 16,995. There is also a growth since 1885, when the figures given were 19,750. It is certain that had the census been taken earlier in the year, before the usual summer migration, and had all the inhabitants been taken, the figures would have been upwards of 25,000. A casual inquiry has shown several families who were not enumerated, but it was impossible in the limited time allowed to secure accurate returns, as is proved by the many complaints from all sections of the country.

No exact figures are given of the increase by wards, although it is stated that the count in Ward One showed over 3,000 names, against 2,968 in 1885, and in Ward Seven over 3,000 against 2,016 in the same year. Wards Two and Three will probably show the largest gains, as those wards have been built up rapidly the past five years. In 1885, Newton was the eighteenth city in the state in point of population, and possibly the census will move us up to fourteenth or fifteenth, as the fourteenth city in 1885 was Taunton, which had that year 23,674.

The district served by the Newton Post Office embraces now a population of over 10,000, made up of 4,000 from Ward One, 3,000 from Ward Seven, 500 from Ward Six, 2,000 from Ward Two, and 1,000 from Watertown, Newton Corner being still the great centre of population of the city.

If the greatest good of the greatest number were to be considered, the City Hall and all the other city offices would be located in Newton, and by means of the street railway on Washington street, and one on Centre street, it would be very convenient for the people of all the other sections. However, it might be as well to state that we have no expectation of ever having the City Hall any nearer than Newtonville, which, when all the city is built up, will be the centre of population as it is now the geographical centre.

THE SENATORSHIP.

The question of the next Senator from this district is exciting some interest, and the death of Mr. Willard Marcy removes one whom most of the Republicans in the city would have been glad to support, and probably a united delegation could have been sent in his favor. What will be done now is not apparent, for there seems as much division of sentiment as ever. At least three of the wards promise to have a favorite son to present, and if the rivalry is as determined as in previous years, the nomination will go elsewhere. There is no possible chance of a Newton candidate being chosen unless he has a united delegation behind him. We have no candidate to boom, and it is useless to talk of any unless he can secure the vote of all the delegates, and probably the history of former years will be repeated this year. It is much easier to unite the delegates from all the rest of the district, than it is to unite the Newton delegates.

It would seem to be a good time this year to lay aside local jealousies, and personal ambitions, and work for the good of the whole city. The Republicans from the different wards should get together and unite on some candidate who will be acceptable to all, the best man of course, and then go to work and secure his nomination. If this is done Newton can have the Senatorship, but if Newton sends two or three candidates, the prize will probably go to Waltham, where there is no unhappy division of sentiment, and the people are always ready to unite in the interests of their city.

The Harvard bridge promises to continue as a monument of something, instead of serving as a means of communication between Boston and Cambridge. The railroad commissioners have decided that the city of Cambridge will not be permitted to cross the Boston & Albany tracks at grade, notwithstanding the special act obtained with this object in view at the last session of the Legislature. It is ordered that the avenue connecting with the new bridge from Boston be carried over the crossing on an iron bridge sixteen feet above the track and of the width of the avenue. By the act of 1882, under which the city councils of Boston and Cambridge have proceeded, it was provided that the manner of crossing the railroad should be prescribed by the railroad commissioners, and the board held that the act of the present year did not restrict their power in the premises. The commissioners admit that the carrying out of their order may raise questions of damages, but they are not ready to permit the establishment of "a memorial of folly, to abolish which would each year become more difficult, and which every increase in the prosperity and growth of the two cities and in the freight business of the Boston & Albany railroad would render more notorious."

At the time of General Fremont's death he was engaged upon the manuscript of a paper for the Century's forthcoming series on the California Gold Hunters. It was to be entitled "Finding Paths to California," and was not only to deal with the several exploring expeditions, but to narrate the writer's intimate connection with the events which led to the conquest and occupation of the territory. The work will be promptly continued by Mrs. Fremont. A first draft of the article had been made, and the subject had been so recently and closely discussed by General and Mrs. Fremont that she will have no trouble in completing the manuscript, for which she had already written an introduction, as well as a supplement describing her life in Monterey in 1846. A fine portrait of General Fremont from a daguerreotype of '49 or '50 will appear in the September number of The Century, along with portraits of Commodore Sloat and Stockton, "Duke" Gwinn, and Governor Burnett, in an article giving account of "How California came into the Union."

There seems to be even more complaint than usual, this year, from subscribers who are at the various shore resorts, that their papers fail to arrive. We have had a dozen cases the past week of subscribers failing to get their GRAPHICS along the shore from Maine to Rhode Island. Where the trouble is it is hard to say, but the curious thing is that where a paper once begins to come to the summer traveller, it always arrives promptly thereafter, which suggests that the fault may be in the various shore and country postoffices, who are not familiar with the address and so give it to the wrong parties. Whenever the GRAPHIC fails to arrive, we shall be glad to send another copy, if notice is sent to this office.

SPEAKER REED's statesmanship is outlined by his remark to Gen. Hyde, the efficient manager of the National Soldiers' Home. He said that his opposition to him was not personal but "You are a friend of the Maine senators, and it is a part of my regular course, from which I never deviate, to oppose the appointment of any one who is a friend of Frye and Hale." No matter what are a man's merits or record or services, he cannot have Mr. Reed's support, if he is a friend of the Maine senators.

The Waltham Free Press is able to predict a surplus of some one hundred millions this year, after all the appropriations have been made, and all the expenses of the government paid. Such an able financier is lost in Waltham, he should go down and help out the administration at Washington at once. They would probably be willing to give him half if he would fulfil his predictions.

The Free Press finds the sentiment of Waltham people at variance with the reported population of that thriving berg. The approximate figures from the enumerator are 18,533, but some sanguine merchants think Waltham's real population should be 20,000 or 22,000. It is very often we find the reality less than a sanguine man's opinions.

The News is the name of Woburn's new weekly, and the first issue is a carrying out of the name. The paper is to be non-partisan in character, and its object will be to "preach Woburn, first, last and all the time."

There's a good deal of ruffling in certain political circles since the Hon. John E. Russell has returned from his European trip. It's John E. and William E. which make up the pair.

DEATH OF MISS PALMER.

NEWTON COTTAGE HOSPITAL LOSES ITS HONORED MATRON.

Miss Mary Frances Palmer died Monday evening at the Newton Cottage Hospital, after an illness of 15 days. The cause of death is attributed to a pelvic abscess. The deceased was 42 years of age. She was the matron of the Cottage Hospital, having been appointed about three years ago. She was a graduate of the Massachusetts General Hospital training school, and filled a position as nurse in the McLean asylum, Somerville, before coming to Newton. She was generally esteemed in this city where she had a large circle of friends, and her death is a great loss to the hospital. The deceased leaves a mother and two sisters in Putney, Vt., where she was born and where the remains were sent Tuesday for interment.

An autopsy was held at the hospital at 9 o'clock Tuesday morning by Drs. F. L. Thayer and W. O. Hunt. The abscess was an unusually large one, containing over a pint of liquid.

The Death of Miss Palmer.

The friends of the Newton Cottage Hospital will learn with a deep feeling of personal loss that Mary F. Palmer, the loved and esteemed matron of the institution, has ended her labors in this world. After a severe attack of peritonitis she has passed away about two weeks ago, just as she was preparing for a vacation, she passed quietly away on Monday night last. Everything the medical skill of Newton and Boston physicians, and the best and most efficient nursing could do, proved unavailing.

Since Miss Palmer's arrival at the change of the institution on the 10th of May, 1887 she has given all her energies to the welfare of the sick and suffering who have been placed in her care. With a cheerful courage, a wonderful devotion to duty, and a marked executive ability she has conducted the internal affairs of the hospital in a manner which has been most satisfactory to the trustees and medical officers and which has won the respect and affection of nurses, patients and employees. None but those who are familiar with the details of the hospital can comprehend the value of the quiet, painstaking, ever vigilant, self-sacrificing service which has been performed by this "good and faithful servant."

A more extended and more carefully prepared notice of the valuable work performed in this community by Miss Palmer will undoubtedly be given to the citizens of Newton later.

The hospital is fortunate in having the efficient services of Miss Peters, the head nurse, who is fully competent to perform the duties of matron.

Very True.

We believe all candid-minded, sensible men can and will endorse the Brockton Enterprise in saying that the greatest "problem of labor" is how to get rid of labor's bad advisers. Laboring men lose more by entrusting their affairs to false friends and selfish advocates than they would miss by depending upon their good sense, upon enlightened public opinion, and upon a certainty that capital cannot crush labor to the wall without killing the goose that lays the golden eggs. Where labor is self-respecting it is respected. [Milford Journal.]

Mechanic's Fair.

S. G. Chickering & Co., whose advertisement appears in another column, will be one of the largest exhibitors of pianos at the Mechanics Fair, to be held in Boston this fall. They have secured a large amount of floor space, and will make the excellence of their pianos known to the thousands of visitors to the fair. They will invite special attention to their upright pianos, which they believe have merits over any other make. They have some fine instruments now on exhibition at their warehouses, 158 Tremont street, Boston.

The Bond Sale.

The financial article of the Boston Post says that the number of bonds aggregating $5,356,350—which the government purchased Thursday was not as large as had been anticipated, but the maximum price—124—which the Secretary of the Treasury paid for 1 per cents will very likely lead to larger offerings next week.

Patriotic Veterans.

On Saturday we had occasion to comment upon the gratifying change of heart which has come to Dahlgren Post, G. A. R., upon the matter of service pensions. Another indication of the growth of a better feeling in veteran circles is seen in the Veterans' Political League, whose principles, as printed at length by the NEWTON GRAPHIC, must commend themselves to all true patriots, as well as to the man of ordinary judgment and common sense.

These patriotic veterans express the belief that every American citizen owes his country in time of war military service; that pensions should be paid only to those who were disabled in the service; and to their families after their death; that it would be ungracious and ungrateful to ask more, in view of munificent system of pensions already in operation, together with the establishment of soldiers' homes and the preference given to veterans in public employment; that to the veterans who were not disabled in service, the consciousness of having discharged the highest duty of American citizenship constitutes a sufficient reward for sacrifices they endured; that in time of peace every American citizen owes to his country the duty of earning his own living, an obligation not cancelled or weakened by any service, that every veteran who who accepts a pension while he is able to support his family is lowering the tone of American independence and patriotism, and selfishly increasing the burden of taxation upon his fellow citizens; that Congress, legislature and veteran organizations, in all measures pertaining to soldiers, are bound to consider the interests of the country first and the soldiers second; that any extension of the pension system beyond the point already reached, especially in the direction of service pension, is unnecessary, demoralizing and pernicious.

We cannot believe that any really patriotic, self-respecting soldier or sailor of the war can find fault in the above to find fault with. We believe on the contrary that every honest, manly soldier or sailor will in his heart of heart admit that the position taken by the Veterans' Patriotic League is the only logical one possible to be taken by the men who served their country in its hour of peril. They did their duty, nothing more, and the consciousness of having done their duty is enough to make them not disabled. How grand, nobler, how much more patriotic is this view than that which has been too often expressed, "We saved the country and therefore the country belongs to us, and we're going to get all we can out of it." The creed of the Veterans' Patriotic League has the true ring in it, and we trust that it will receive the endorsement which it deserves from veterans both within and without the Grand Army.

Another Comet Discovered.

The discovery position the following: July 23, midnight, Greenwich, right ascension 15 hours 12 minutes, north, declination 78 degrees. The comet is faint, and has a rapid motion east.

The best Hair Mattress is none too good for your bed. Sound sleep is cheap at any price, and it cannot be bought with money is not strictly correct. —The Walnut street railroad is still in the embryo and must remain until the city fathers have taken their well-earned rest. With the proposal of street railroad facilities, there comes naturally considerable opposition, but it cannot be disputed that the consummation of a scheme opening easy methods of transportation between the villages, is in the line of progress and in the interests of the future growth and development of the city.

—Joseph Davis, aged 16 years, residing on West street, has been imitating the Harvard vandals, confining his efforts, however, to the liberal application of green paint to the fences and stone walls on Walnut street, extending from Tupper's grain store nearly to the school house. The damage is placed by a local valuer at about $150. Davis was arrested by Officer N. W. Bosworth Tuesday afternoon and was in court Wednesday morning, where he was fined $3 and costs.

—John Haley died on Tuesday at the police station, West Newton, under the following circumstances: Under the influence of stimulants, on Monday he took a dose of Paris green, but remedies were promptly applied and he seemed to recover from its effects. He was brought before the police court Tuesday morning as a common drunkard, and was sentenced to four months in the House of Correction. Finding him too sick to be taken away, he was kept in the police station where he died about half past one o'clock. The arrest was made by officer Clay.

—The Newton Street Railway Company announce that commencing Friday, July 25th, an electric motor car will be run regularly between West Newton and Newton, leaving Newtonville as follows: For Newton, 6.15 a. m., 7.08 a. m. and every hour until 4.08 p. m. For West Newton, 6.38 a. m., and every hour until 4.38 p. m. Sundays, for Newton, 7.08 a. m. and every hour until 4.08 p. m.; for West Newton, 7.38 a. m., and every hour until 4.58 p. m. This arrangement is only temporary, as the company intend to put on more cars and run on half hour time as soon as it can secure sufficient power to do so.

—Rev. R. A. White preached Sunday morning from the text "By their fruits ye shall know them," applying this text to the church as a body, to various other organizations and to the individual. If the crowd as applied to the life quickened the impulse to do good to one's fellowmen, made the motive higher, the thought purer, the entire being better, truer, nobler, then hold it to be a struggle and a help, if not, drop it as a useless thing and take something better in its place. Accept some belief as an active, working power, that shall prove, by the life it urges upon its man, that it is worthy of acceptance. The faith that does not enter into a man's personality and vivify it and make it helpful and happy is of little value.

—Norumbega Tower has become a favorite point with Newtonvillians for an afternoon drive and is in fact the Mecca to which pilgrims in ages and from many sections turn. Its approach through a winding woody way; the mysterious inscription on the broad tablet; the ascent in the dusky twilight, deepened by the cool grey walls that shut round one in the spiral climb; the glimpses through the openings and the delight at the view spread for one's delectation at the top, are all fascinating.

—The other evening the moon showed just the fairest line of her silver crescent, the evening star shone clear and bright; on the winding, placid river canoes glided with languid grace while on the summit of the mountain a youth and maiden, indulging in love's young dream while the tricycle waited, without one sign of feeling, below.

—The prospect of a new clubhouse in Newton seems excellent, the Newton Club having outgrown its present quarters, once the home of Gen. Hull and at present the property of the Newton Associates. The question of providing additional room has been under discussion for some time, and with that purpose in view, it was proposed to build an extension to the present building, affording sufficient space for additional bowling alleys and a billiard room. The plan, however, has not met with general favor, many of the members of the club believing that it would be economy to put up a suitable building, designed especially for the purposes of a clubhouse. The necessary money can be easily raised, and the club would ultimately win out in the building. Those favoring the latter project, suggest the erection of a building to cost about $30,000 in some central location, a lot on Newtonville avenue in Newtonville being favored by many as the site for the new club-house. A meeting of the club will be held in the near future for the purpose of taking action relative to the erection of the proposed new building. The membership of the club is now about 250 and it is thought that these figures can be easily doubled with increased accommodations.

—The many friends of Mrs. J. G. Thompson of Otis street will deeply sympathize with her in the loss of her sister, Mrs. Kate E. Miller, widow of Hon. Frank W. Miller, who died very suddenly last Sunday evening, July 20th, at her home in Portsmouth, N. H. Mrs. Miller for several years past has been a frequent visitor at Mrs. Thompson's, and had many warm friends here, and her death was with great surprise and regret of her unexpected demise. The Portsmouth Evening Times, in an extended notice of the sad event, says that the death was due to the grippe, which winter's scourge, which left her in delicate health. On Friday the 11th, Mrs. Miller drove into Portsmouth with her sister, but in the afternoon was taken ill, and pneumonia was quickly developed, and death occurred Sunday afternoon. The Times adds: "Mrs. Miller's benevolent disposition impelled her to constant activity, and in the service of suffering humanity she literally wore herself out. No charity appealed to her in vain, and her cheery smile was welcomed at the humblest home as a message of health and peace. In church work, she was with the foremost; but chiefly with the help of the great circle of devoted women bearing so closely to heart the fortunes of the Cottage Hospital, and by the members of the S. P. C. A., of which she was an original and active member, she carried on a life of almost perpetual legacy. In social circles she will be deeply lamented, and to her large circle of relatives will have come one of the saddest of bereavements."

—The Boston Manufacturing Company has the call now and has pretty nearly gobbled up all the water in the Charles river above the dam. The water in the river is about three feet deep in many places and a rather uninviting stretch of mud bank is exposed. An increased amount of water in the river would certainly be conducive as a health precaution.

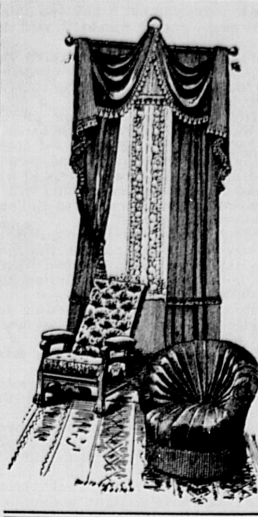

—An unknown man went to the Robertson's boat house, Riverside, Wednesday evening, about 5.30 o'clock, and hired an Adirondack boat, starting out soon after and pulling down the Charles river toward Weston bridge. When he had rowed about a mile from the boat house, and was just opposite the Brigham estate, he fell over the side of the boat and sank soon after, making no effort to regain the craft. The accident was witnessed by a bright moon, a friend went out immediately in another boat from the shore, and succeeded in getting the stranger above water, finally bringing him to the shore after he had been in the river about five minutes. The usual restorative measures were resorted to, and Dr. F. E. Porter summoned. The combined efforts of the physician and the others present, however, failed. The body was removed to S. F. Cate's undertaking rooms in West Newton by order of the medical examiner. Deceased was about 50 years of age, thick set, dark complexion, and wore a dark vest and coat, tinged with gray. He was attired in dark coat and dark trousers. In one of his pockets a carpenter's rule and a bunch of keys were found, but nothing that would serve to establish his identity. He has been generally believed that the man was intoxicated when he fell out of the boat, but there are those who think that the man acted methodically, with suicidal intent. He made no effort, it appears, to save himself, and when taken out of the water by Mr. Arthur A. Brigham and Mr. A. J. Selbridge, was standing upon the sandy bottom of the river, his head leaning over, with his mouth full of water. The mere act of throwing his head back would have brought his mouth above water, and by a very little energy he could have regained the boat, which had righted, and was only about 10 feet away. It seems that the man left the boat about 5.30 o'clock. He was first seen by Mr. Brigham, at 6.15, near the shores of his estate, and had not moved over 100 feet from the spot where he was noticed at that time until he fell out of the boat about an hour afterwards. He was landed on the shore on the Weston side in less than five minutes after he went under, and Mr. Selbridge and Mr. Brigham made every effort to resuscitate the man, whose breathing finally became distinct and suddenly stopped. The abrupt termination of his breathing is regarded as peculiar. He appeared to be regaining his normal condition. It is thought that the man is C. J. Schumaker, who has been missing from his home, 118 Highland street, Roxbury, since Wednesday afternoon, as the description of the missing man answers to that of the deceased.

—The Newton Street Railway Co. announce that on and after Friday, July 25th, an electric motor car will be run regularly between West Newton and Newton, leaving Newtonville as follows: For Newton, 6.15 a. m., 7.08 a. m. and every hour until 4.08 p. m. For West Newton, 6.38 a. m., and every hour until 4.38 p. m. On Sunday the first car will leave West Newton at 7.00 a. m. and every hour until 4.00 p. m. Returning leave Newton at 7.30 a. m. and every hour until 4.30 p. m. This arrangement is but temporary as the company intend to put on more cars and run on half hour time as soon as it can secure power sufficient to do so.

LOVE IN A BARREL.

BY HOWARD PYLE.

(From the Northwestern Miller.)

I. A long row of some dozen or so great stone mills, with roofs tall and steep, or hipped and gabled, and with walls whitened with flour, gaped by open sheds and half-doors upon a sunny stretch of dusty road, they stand upon the steep bluff shore of a river. Upon the road they are two stories high; upon the river front they are four, five or even six. In some seasons sloops, brigs and barques are lashed to the river walls loading with barrels of flour or corn meal, the shouts of the stevedores and the creaking of blocks and tackles echoing from stony wall to stony wall. On the decks lounge a few idle sailors in baggy breeches or petticoats, club cues down their backs, and cocked hats or Monterey caps upon their heads; and upon the road in front of the mill doors stand clustered the queer old vehicles of the day, farmers' carts, coopers' carts, great Conestoga wagons dragged by teams of eight, ten or twelve mules, and which travel sometimes even so far as Pittsburg.

Upon the further side of the road from the mills is the mill-race, brimming with the speeding waters that in the night time fill the silence with the brawling of their hurrying rush. Here and there side streams shoot under the bridges and lift flood-gates, and set the huge, groaning wheels a-turning and the rude machinery and great mill-stones to jarring and turning in answer.

Such, one hundred years ago, were the famous old Brandywine flour mills, which ground more meal during the Revolution and for the old West India trade than was ground at any other place in the country.

II.

It was the evening of the 12th of September in the year 1777. The yellow sunlight streamed in through the windows, and all the room was full of the good smell of supper. The blue china cups and saucers and plates and dishes, and the pewter spoons and the iron knives and two-pronged forks, polished till they shone like silver, caught the light, and winked and sparkled and twinkled back again at the broad yellow patches of light on the floor.

Friend Sparks and his family sat at supper, but though the smell of it was so good, the knives and forks and spoons clattered in Charles's hands, and the family ate and drank without much heart in the matter.

"I don't know," said Friend Joseph, laying down his knife and fork and looking around at his daughters, and more especially at his niece, Mattie Dixon, "I don't know what it is that sets you girls so agog over a laced hat and a pair of buttons and a blue coat and brass buttons. Here was General Washington and his army not more than a month in town, and now, because he has gone and takes away with him his snipe-jack aides-de-camp and captains and majors, all the women in Wilmington and Brandywine are in vapors."

Now, men are not quick at seeing things, but the women knew very well why Mattie Dixon's eyes were red. Indeed, a gloom had fallen upon them all ever since a young farmer had ridden down from Chad's Ford that morning, bringing the news of a great battle that had been fought up the Brandywine. Later in the day, two farmers' wagons had passed through the village, bringing each a load of wounded men lying in the straw.

But Friend Joseph Sparks did not notice Mattie's red eyes.

"I do not," said he presently, separating the don't in his emphasis, "I do not see what it is about a shedder of blood that turns a woman's head. I, for one, should be sorry to see a daughter of mine tied to such an unregenerate, soulless son of a snake as that young man, who makes bloodshed a trade, and thinks that a blue coat and brass buttons excuse murder. Now, there was a battle fought yesterday," he continued, leaning back in his chair and folding his hands, "and no doubt many likely young men killed or maimed for life. I think it is that Philip Van Cleiff who came here so often when—" The worthy friend was suddenly interrupted in his monologue by Mattie Dixon rising so precipitately as to knock her chair over backward with a loud clatter upon the floor, and then hurrying from the room without a word, feeling in her pocket for her handkerchief as she went.

Friend Sparks stared after her with open eyes.

A momentary pause followed as the door banged behind the girl.

"How could she talk so, Joseph?" said the good mother presently. "Didn't thou see that it was as much as she could do to contain her spirits?" Then she, too, pushed back her chair and followed her niece.

"Botheration!" said Friend Sparks, and then he also pushed back his chair with a loud clatter upon the floor, and taking his pipe from the mantel-shelf, filled it with tobacco and lit it with a coal he chose very carefully from the embers on the hearth.

His three daughters, Rebecca, Mary Jane and Susan, said nothing, but as he went out of the door in a swirling cloud of smoke they exchanged very meaning glances.

Friend Joseph Sparks was one right well known in the milling circles of his day; a wealthy man as times went, a keen bargainer, but as honest as the palm of your hand. He was the owner of three of the Brandywine mills, and sat in the gallery, as it was called, in the Friends' meeting; for, like all of the Brandywine millers, he was a Quaker.

He was a man perhaps too keen and caustic in his speech, but with a good heart buried in the prickly husk. He alone of all those Quaker millers dared to grind flour during the dark days of Valley Forge. Now he leaned over the front gate feeling very uncomfortable at the thought of having made Mattie curl, looking absently up the road and puffing curling wreaths of smoke into the breathless air.

Friend Sparks watched them with a sort of dull curiosity. So many of the broken army had passed by ones and twos through the village that day that the sharp edge of interest was worn off.

But as the cart came up to him it stopped. "Do you know any one living here by name Joseph Sparks?" said the officer.

"I am Joseph Sparks," answered the miller, opening his gate and coming out. "Who has thee there in the cart, friend?" looking into it a straw.

"A friend of yours," said the officer, "who was hurt yesterday in the battle."

As he spoke the figure raised itself from the straw where it lay, and turned toward the miller a face white as death, the head and jaws bound around with a bloody cloth, and a pair of eyes dull and languid.

The old Quaker hardly recognized in the pale, woe-begone figure the gay young Major Van Cleiff, who had visited at his house so frequently during the last month.

He stood staring, agape, holding his pipe idly in his hand. "Is there much hurt?" said he, at last.

"I don't know," said the young man, faintly.

"Can't you lodge him somewhere till he gets some doctoring?" asked the officer.

Friend Sparks stood for a moment sunk in troubled thought.

"Nay," said he at last, "I can't bring him into the house. If the British should come, as it's likely they will, it would bring trouble that I have no right to shoulder. I can lodge him at the mill, and will make him as comfortable as I can." And so it was arranged.

Friend Joseph followed the cart down the short hill to the mill-door, and there saw the wounded man carried into the loft, where a bed of empty bags was made upon a pile of wheat. Then, leaving the mill foreman to watch the patient, he went back to the house for his coat and hat.

The news of the coming of the wounded man had already flown through the house. Mattie met him at the door, and as he stood in the dark entry gripped him by the wrist with both hands.

"Uncle," she said in a breathless whisper, "what's the matter?"

"I don't know," said Friend Sparks in an answering whisper; "no, I think not." He could just see her pale face in the gathering darkness.

"Oh, uncle!" she said, in the same gasping whisper. "He asked me to marry him before he went away. If he dies my heart will break." And she began to cry convulsively.

Friend Sparks stood quite still for awhile. "I am going for Dr. Shalleross," said he at last, and then Mattie let go his wrist and he left her shutting the sitting-room door very softly behind him.

"After all, it is no such great matter," said the doctor, as he and Friend Sparks walked across the road from the mill to the house in the starry darkness. "It is a sword stroke upon the side of the head, but the brain is not injured. He is only faint from loss of blood. I sewed up the cut, and I'll come again to see him tomorrow morning. I wonder," he added, "that they should have sent him here to Wilmington instead of taking him to Philadelphia along with them."

"Never mind," said Friend Sparks. "He is here now, and I'll make him as comfortable as I can." Mattie Dixon awakened at early dawn the next morning with the dripping of the rain falling upon the roof, pat! pat! and an unusual sound of men's voices out in the road before the house, loud talking and laughter. She jumped out of bed and ran to the window, and saw upon the other side of the road a sight that made her heart stand still.

A row of stacked muskets stood under the trees among the yellow leaves. Accoutrements, haversacks and cartridge-boxes hung from the crossed bayonets, and squatting, loling and sitting upon the ground were some two score of soldiers in tall grenadier hats, with white leggings upon their legs, and the blaze of red coats shining from under the cloaks hung loosely across their shoulders. Three of four officers sat upon a bench between two of the maple trees, and the white smoke from the fire rose sluggishly up through the half-naked branches.

The British had come.

Without waiting an instant, Mattie slipped on a petticoat over her nightgown, and in her bare feet ran downstairs and burst into her uncle's room.

"Uncle!" she said, "the British have come!"

Joseph Sparks sat up in bed as though moved by a spring.

"Oh!" cried the girl, wringing her hands, "the soldiers will find him and kill him, or send him to the bulks."

"Botheration!" said Friend Sparks, "thou thinks of nothing but the young man. Go and get dressed. Thou's a spectacle."

"If he was only a barrel of flour," said Friend Joseph, as the family sat at a melancholy breakfast that morning, "I'd get him away as easy as goose grease."

And then again they all sat silent in thought.

"Uncle," said Mattie, suddenly, "does thee remember those double barrels that thee had made to send corn meal to Jamaica in the Nancy schooner before the war? Could a man get into one of them?"

"Perhaps so," said the miller, "if"—he stopped suddenly, and pushed back his chair. "Why, thou's hit it, girl," he cried. "We might barrel him up and send him off—eh, mother? Why, one of those West India double barrels would be the very thing."

"We might send him to Sister Jane, in Chester," said Rebecca Sparks, looking at her husband.

"No, no; that would never do," said the miller. "No man could lie cramped up in a barrel five or six hours. Remember, too, that he's wounded. I tell thee we can do it. We can send him to Cousin Jane Penny; that's only four miles. We might say that we were sending a barrel to Chester, and they would never know that it stopped on the way—tschik!" said he, suddenly. "Here we are in a rut; who's to take the barrel?"

"I can't see how he could," said Friend Sparks; "they would know that John Binney would never go to Chester with a barrel of flour. If the boys were only some (by the boys he meant the two sons, Reuben and John) they might do it."

In the pause that followed, Mattie suddenly arose and went to her uncle and knelt beside his chair. "Uncle," said she in a low voice, "click, tick."

"What is it, Mattie?"

"One day when aunt and thee were away from home I put on the clothes Reuben wore when he was a boy." She bowed her head, and a long pause of silence followed. The old clock in the corner sat sharply. "Click, tick." At last Friend Sparks broke the silence, and he spoke in a voice more gentle than his usual acid tone. "Thou may put them on again, Mattie," said he.

III. Col. Gorse had made the counting-room of the great north mill his headquarters. He was lighting his pipe at a candle when the glass door opened and Friend Joseph Sparks came in, his head bowed, a heavy sigh on his lips, and a look of despair on his face.

He held the sleeve of the Friend's coat between his thumb and finger.

He had come, the Friend said, to ask for a permit to pass a barrel of flour through the lines.

"Take off your hat," said Colonel Gorse.

"Nay," said the Friend, "it is against my conscience to take off my hat to any man."

"D— your conscience!" said the colonel. "Take off your hat."

"Nay," said the Friend, "I cannot take off my hat."

The orderly who stood near the colonel, leaned over and said something to him.

"I don't care a d— who he is," said the Friend in reply to the whispered words. "He shan't wear his hat before me. Take it off, corporal!"

The Friend made no objections as the corporal lifted off his hat and tossed it upon the bench beside the door. "Now, then," said the colonel, "tell me your business?"

The opening did not seem very propitious, but Friend Sparks began his story as best he could. He had a sister, he said, to whom he had promised a barrel of flour. It should have gone yesterday, but he had put off sending. His sister would be looking for it and he was sorry that he should not get it. Would the colonel let him send it through the lines by his hired boy that morning?

"Can't your sister buy flour without sending to Brandywine for it?" said the miller. "Why, thou sees, friend," said the miller, "money has been very scarce with us of late. My sister's husband is on a voyage to the West Indies, and she has to help her in these matters, so, if you'll let me, I'll send that barrel of flour this morning."

Once more the orderly whispered in the colonel's ear. Perhaps he told the chief officer that Joseph Sparks was one of the richest men in that part of the country. The two held a muttered talk for a few minutes, and then the colonel turned abruptly to the Friend with more respect in his voice than he had shown before.

"What time did you want to send that flour?" said he.

"About nine o'clock," said Friend Joseph.

"Well," said the colonel, "have it ready by nine o'clock, and I will let it go through the lines."

So at nine o'clock a cart half full of straw stood in front of the door at the south mill, with a pretty, pale-faced boy sitting on the seat, and a horse's head sticking out of the cart. The miller and the foreman went to the door, and the boy, who was a Quaker, stepped out of the cart, and took a barrel by a block and tackle from the loft above. Two or three soldiers were standing in the rain with their cloaks over their shoulders, idly watching the operation. They did not see three auger holes in the top of the barrel. As it touched the ground, Friend Sparks carefully threw a block and tackle from the loft above. Two or three soldiers were standing in the rain with their cloaks over their shoulders, idly watching the operation. They did not see three auger holes in the top of the barrel. As it touched the ground, Friend Sparks carefully threw a block and tackle from the loft above.

"That 'ere is the biggest barrel of flour that ever I see," said one of the men taking his pipe out of his mouth. "It's a double barrel, friend," said the miller brushing his hands together. "It was rolled in that way to send to the West Indies."

"Where be that going?" said the soldier.

"To Chester," said the miller briefly. "Now then, John, easy." They turned the barrel on its side and rolled it slowly up the plank to the cart.

"You roll it up the plank, and we're full of glass," said one of the soldiers. "Let me help you."

"Never mind, friend," said the miller. "We can handle it better without thy help. So now—John—that's it," and the barrel was rolled into the cart and the soldiers did not notice that it lay upon its side, the end nearest the head of the cart raised a little higher than the other.

As they went by Colonel Gorse's headquarters the orderly who had befriended Friend Joseph stood at the door. A young, boyish-looking lieutenant wrapped in a cloak sat upon a horse near by, and two troopers and a corporal stood beside him, the muzzles of their guns pointed downward, the flintlocks sheltered from the drizzly rain under their overcoats.

"Is this the barrel of flour?" said the orderly, peering into the cart.

"Aye," said Friend Sparks, that is it.

"It's a plaguy big one," he observed.

"It is easier to send it in such bulk," said the miller.

"These men are going to Chester," said the orderly, pointing to the young officer and the three troopers. "They'll see," said the Friend with a start.

His words fell upon Friend Sparks like a thunderbolt. His mind seized upon everything in an instant of flight. Those few words meant either death to the wounded man, who would have to stay five hours in the barrel, a dreadful death, or the disclosure of the secret of the contents be disclosed, imprisonment for himself and perhaps for his niece.

He looked at Mattie, but she kept her head turned away, and made no sign.

"Forward!" said the young officer, and off they moved, he riding in front, and the three men marching beside the cart.

The miller stood looking after them until they had passed beyond the crest of the hill.

"Are you sick, Mr. Sparks?" the orderly asked, looking into his face.

"Nay," said the Friend with a start, "but I feel chilly; I think I'll go home."

Mattie had heard the words as well as her uncle, and as she rode along unheeding the rain and the rough shaking of the cart, her thoughts teemed like a hive of bees, planning and planning as to how she should leave her precious burden at Cousin Jane Penny's house.

She made up her mind at once that should they pass it by, she would confess to the young lieutenant. For imprisonment in the hulks was better than the chance of death in the long ride to Chester.

About two miles from the town there is a little brawling stream, then known by the Swedish name of Skilpott, or Stony Brook. At the edge of the woods, close to the stream, was a company of troopers, who had been stationed to watch the high-road for stragglers from the American army. They had built a rude shelter of fence rails and brushwood beside the road.

As the company came by, one of the sentinels on guard stopped them, and the young lieutenant showed the passes for the cart and its burden.

"Look-ee, Jack," said the soldier, calling to the other. "Here is a chap with the biggest barrel of flour that ever I see. Tell them to fetch the pan, and we'll fill it."

For a moment Mattie's head spun dizzily; then she cried out in a shrill voice: "You shan't touch the flour! The barrel is not yours; you shan't touch it!"

"Zounds!" said the man. "Why shan't we touch it? Can't you spare a little pinch of flour out of such a big barrel as that?"

"No!" cried Mattie, passionately. "You shan't have it."

"Let the man have a little," urged the lieutenant.

"No, he shan't have it!" she cried, more and more vehemently.

Two or three of the others had come forward now and one stood by with a hatchet in his hand.

"By your flour?" said the man who had just spoken, "we shall have some, I tell thee. Here, Dick," to the other sentry, "hold the boy. Now give me the axe till I knock in the head."

"Let me go," screamed Mattie, struggling with the fellow who had caught her by the arms and held them behind her back.

"What is the matter there?" said a harsh voice, and Mattie, turning her head, saw an elderly officer wrapped in a cloak, standing by the fence beside the road.

"They want to rob me," cried she in a gasping voice, "and they shan't do it! They shan't do it!"

"What's the matter, my men?" the officer asked, coming forward. One of the soldiers explained, and the officer turned to Mattie with some surprise.

"And will you not give the poor man a little of your flour?" said the officer.

"No," said Mattie, "I cannot."

"But why?" said the officer.

Mattie hesitated a moment, and then a sudden determination came upon her. "I will tell you," said she, "but I cannot tell them."

"Very well," said the officer, "tell me, then," and he led her a little apart to the side of the road. The poor girl hesitated for a moment or two, looked to the right and the left like a hare in the toils, then, catching him by the arm and raising herself upon tip-toe she breathed into his ear: "Because I am a poor girl, and I am trying to save my dear friend, who is a wounded soldier in the American army and is in pander barrel."

The officer glared at her silently for a little while, beyond that he neither changed countenance nor made a start.

Mattie waited breathlessly to hear what he would say.

Suddenly he turned to the others. "Who gave the order to pass this boy through to Chester?" said he.

"Col. Gorse," answered the young lieutenant.

Once more the officer hesitated for a moment, and then he said to the boy: "Very well," said he at last, "then let him go."

Mattie gave him one eloquent look of gratitude, and then, without waiting a moment, ran to her cart, and clapping the reins, rode off as fast as the sober old horse could draw its load.

IV.

As they climbed the steep hill beyond the brawling stream the young officer reined back his horse beside the cart.

"What was the reason you wouldn't give the men some flour?" said he.

"Because I would get whipped," said Mattie, looking up at him with her dark eyes. "Mister Sparks is a quiet man, and he's a good fellow, but he's a Quaker, and when he whips he whips hard."

The young officer laughed aloud. "And that was your wonderful secret, was it?" said he.

"No," said Mattie. "I did not want the soldiers to know it, for fear they'd laugh at me." Then suddenly, "There is a farmhouse a mile up the road yonder, and Mr. Sparks told me to stop there for a letter if you'd wait till Mrs. Penny wrote it."

"No," said the young officer. "We make no stops till we get to Chester."

"Very well," said Mattie, with a show of indifference, "just as you please. It wouldn't take over fifteen minutes, and she can null a crock of the best hard cider to be had in the state of Delaware."

The young soldier rode on for awhile in silence. He had been marching in the rain with the three men since daylight that morning. He had had nothing to eat but a piece of bread and meat, and nothing to drink but a cup of lukewarm tea, which he had swallowed in the thought of the mulled cider and the warm rest for a few minutes was alluring.

"Where is the house?" said he, suddenly.

"Oh, half a mile or so along the road," said Mattie. "It don't matter, if you won't stop. It was only a letter that I was to take if I had gone to Chester yesterday."

The young officer reined back his horse to where the troopers were plodding behind, and a few words passed between them. "Very well," said he, riding forward to the cart again, "we'll stop for fifteen minutes, if it won't take you any longer."

Mattie's heart began to beat as though to smother her; she felt her eyes grow misty with tears. "Very well," said she, after awhile, when she could trust herself to speak, "just as you choose."

How Mattie ever got the soldiers into the kitchen of the farmhouse, and her cousin into the back entry without the good old dame's betraying her she never could tell.

Perhaps it was because Friend Penny was near-sighted; perhaps it was because she was so bewildered by the coming of the soldiers, that she did not recognize Mattie at first.

And now at last Mattie had her in the entry back of the dining-room.

"Cousin Mary," said she, "don't say anything—don't make a noise—I am Mattie—hush!"

"Mistress!" cried the old lady. The girl clasped her hand over her mouth.

"Hush!" she said again. "Don't make a noise—I can't stay—I must go back to the kitchen—there's a man in the barrel in the cart—send some hard cider to the kitchen right away and then get him out—I've told them that I was to stop for a letter—make believe to write one."

All this she said pantingly and brokenly, and then she was gone.

"Where's the mulled cider?" said the young lieutenant.

"It's coming," said Mattie. "I told the old lady to fetch it right away."

The corporal had lit his pipe and was standing looking out of the window, streaked and blurred with rain. "Hallo!" he cried, suddenly. "Hi there! Stop! What's that man doing with the horse and cart?"

Mattie looked out of the window and saw John's horse, the hired man, leading the horse and cart toward the shed behind the house. "Oh! he's only going to take the horse out of the rain," she said; "let him alone. Here comes the cider."

Friend Penny brought it in with trembling hands and set it down upon the table. "Now, my man," said Mattie, "you go fetch me the iron. I'll sizzle the cider up. Oh, I am a master-hand at making cider!" she rattled on; "I'll show you how to brew a mulled cider that'll make your wig stand on end. Many and many a glass I have brewed for old Joey Sparks, and it had to be just so or he'd leather me."

She hardly knew what she was saying, but she chattered wildly on as she heated the iron in the fire, dipping it into the cider until it steamed again, sweetening the fragrant brown liquor with sugar, and spicing it with cloves and allspice. "Now, then, taste that, captain," she said, handing it to the young officer with a flourish.

She heard a sound of shuffling feet without, as though of men carrying a heavy weight, and then a thump as though of that burden set upon the floor.

"What is that?" said the lieutenant, stopping his hand as he raised the cup to his lips.

"I don't know," said Mattie. "Nothing, I guess. Did you know that this house was haunted?"

"No, of course I didn't. How should I know it?"

"Hallo!" said the corporal when they came out into the rain, "they've stood the barrel on end!"

And so they had, but it was not the same barrel that Mattie had brought with her from the Brandywine mills. She saw that at a flash, and then remembered that her uncle had sent a double barrel one time to Friend Penny to pack smoked hams for the winter.

That long, dreadful ride to Chester always remained in her memory like some horrid nightmare. She had a dim recollection of staring straight before her of what seemed to her the unending road, the fine rain dashing in her face and a bitter tightness in her throat. But at last it was ended, and she lay upon the bed in her aunt's spare room sobbing and crying as though her heart would break.

Major Van Cleiff made every effort to find the name and the address of the old captain of troopers that suffered Mattie to pass along the road that day, but it was not until he had been married a twelvemonth that he was successful. Then he sent him on the behalf of his wife a gold snuff-box set with diamonds. It was in the shape of half a miniature flour barrel.

A Cure for Constipation and Sick-Headache.

Dr. Silas Lane, while in the Rocky Mountains, discovered a root that when combined with other herbs, makes an easy and certain cure for constipation. It is in the form of dry roots and leaves, and is known as Lulu's Health Medicine. It will cure sick-headache in one night. For the blood, liver and kidneys, and for clearing up the complexion it does wonders. Druggists sell it at 50 cents a package.

Doctors!

Of all the different schools in the country, have thousands die every year of Bright's disease of the kidneys, who could be living today if they had used Sulphur Bitters. They are unequalled in the world for all diseases of the kidneys.—New Haven Union.

The teacher told the child to get grammar to study, whereupon she received this note from the child's mother: "I do not desire for Lulu shall engage in grammar as I prefer her to engage in useful studies and can learn her how to speak and write properly, myself. I have went through two grammars and can't say as they did me no good; I prefer her to engage in German and drawing and vocal music on the piano."

Ice on the Kennebec.

Ice is now quoted at $3.50 and $4 a ton, and some parties are claiming offers of even more than this for their stock. There is no great amount of ice changing hands in Gardiner at present, and ice-men are waiting for warm weather, when fancy prices will be in order. The stacked ice is keeping better and much longer than was at first supposed, and that being shipped now is coming out in good shape. Shipping still continues brisk at this port. The Glazier-Morse stack at Moulton's Mill has all been shipped, while 8,000 of the 12,000 tons at the Ridgewood houses in Pittston has already been shipped.

At the Great Falls houses over 12,000 tons of the 37,000 stored there have been shipped. The Independent Ice company at Smithtown has shipped 15,000 tons out of the 65,000 tons put up there. The Consumers' company has shipped about 6,000 tons, leaving a balance of 44,000 yet to be shipped. E. D. Haley, at South Gardiner, has shipped some 6,000 tons from his houses to date. The Glasco Ice company, at Randolph, has already loaded about 2,000 tons, and has vessels loading there daily. Haynes & Lawrence have shipped several hundred tons, and the Knickerbocker houses at Chelsea, Randolph and Farmingdale are doing their share of shipping.—Augusta (Me.) Journal.

Locomotive Telephones.

A test was made recently of the electric railway signal of the Universal Electric Railway Signal company, of Richmond, Va. About three miles of the track on the Baltimore and Ohio has been provided with this signal system by way of experiment. The apparatus consists of an electric circuit formed by a single iron rod, which is laid between the tracks, and a wire brush attached to each engine in connection with an electric gong and telephone. Two engines approaching each other on the same track come into circuit at the distance of one mile and a half or more, according to strength of the battery, and at once the telephone bells ring. This is a signal for the trains to stop, and the engineers may talk with each other on the telephone to discover the trouble, whatever it may be. Two trains were sent out on the Baltimore and Ohio with a party, including several gentlemen from Washington and Virginia and correspondents of newspapers in different parts of the country. The tests were made and proved extremely satisfactory. —Washington Star.

A Palm Tree in Blossom.

The latest novelty to be boasted of in Connecticut is a genuine palm tree in blossom, the development occurring in the town of Wethersfield. The tree itself has been owned by Senator Silas W. Robbins, of that place, for twenty-three years, and has been carefully guarded during that period in his conservatory. Not until this season, however, has it put out a bud of any sort. The present development has been observed with great interest, nothing of the kind having been known before in this latitude.

The blossom appears at the top of the tree, resembling an exquisite selection of fern, and is buff in color. There is no fragrance. Under the flower itself is the green fruit in its earliest stages. The utmost care has been bestowed by Senator Robbins on this tropical growth for years, but not until within a few months has he anticipated the possession of a genuine flower from it.—Cor. New York Times.

A Doctor's Bill.

Dr. W. B. Spencer, of San Francisco, has presented a bill of $9,510 for professional services during the last sickness of William Lockerman, the Fruitvale miser, who died recently leaving an estate valued at $30,000. He considers his services valued at $100 a visit. The items of the bill are instructive to those who are contemplating death, leaving a reasonably large estate to cover the physician's bill: Nineteen visits at $100 per visit, $1,900; 130 hours' night detention at $10 each, $1,300; medicines furnished, $10; operation Jan. 16, $200; operation two times a day for five days, at $20 each, $200; total, $3,610; paid on account, $100. The bill has been cut down by the public administrator to $1,100, and the doctor's claim will be contested for over that sum.—San Francisco Chronicle.

A Brussels Waterloo Monument.

By desire of the Duke of Cambridge and the members of the London committee for the erection of the Waterloo monument at the Cemetery of Evere, near Brussels, it has been definitely arranged that the inscription on the monument shall run as follows: "In memory of the British officers, non-commissioned officers and men who fell during the Waterloo campaign in 1815, and whose remains were transferred to this cemetery in 1859. This monument is erected by her Britannic Majesty Queen Victoria, empress of India, and by their countrymen, on a site generously presented by the city of Brussels. Mortuorum Patria Memor."—Cor. A Queer Place for a Nest.

A day or two ago the crew of the excursion steamer Forest Queen discovered a bird's nest on the life preservers which are placed just under the awning deck and in it five eggs. The mother bird sits complacently on the eggs as the boat goes to and from the islands, and is generally accompanied by her mate, who flies off at either end and gets food, quickly returning before the boat leaves.—Portland Argus.

Made Tracks.

A gentleman of an inquisitive turn of mind noticed hundreds of tiny tracks in the dust across Somerset avenue, and, following them up, discovered that they were made by an army of caterpillars, who were emigrating.—Taunton Gazette.

Cross Eyed Men III Omens.

Johnny Ward's experience with cross eyed men has been extremely harrowing. When the team was in Philadelphia Ward sat in a quiet nook in the Continental hotel talking with Frank Richter, the editor of Sporting Life. The players were all in uniform and the "bus" was waiting at the door. "Now, Frank," said Ward, "I wish you would step out on the sidewalk and see if any cross eyed men are about. They are about the only things I am afraid of." Richter did as he was requested, and reported the coast clear. Thereupon the players all piled into the "bus" and rolled away. Ward had a middle seat, while Con Daily sat back near the door. They were scarcely a block away from the hotel when a tall, cross eyed negro jumped on the rear step of the "bus." Con spied him in a moment. "Don't look, John," he yelled. "Get off, you dunder!" "Shut your eyes, Johnny," ("Skeddaddle now, or I'll break your jaw") The startled darkey fled.

Four blocks further on a little shock headed urchin whose eyes were bent tentatively on each side of his nose sprang upon the coach. Again Daily shrieked out a warning to Ward, and again the offender was unceremoniously fired. On the journey to the grounds four cross eyed boys jumped on the steps, only to meet with an untimely fate. The last one was a poor, hollow checked, consumptive youth, but he was cross eyed, and was consequently sacrificed like the rest upon the altar of superstition. Upon arriving at the grounds Ward said to Daily: "Con, I don't feel right about all those cross eyed kids and I'm afraid to put you in. You were the one who saw them, you know. I guess I'll put Cook in."

"All right, John," replied Daily. A little later Ward threw superstition to the winds and told Daily to go in and catch. Brooklyn was overwhelmingly defeated, and before the game was half over Daily in sliding to second base sprained his ankle so badly that he was laid up for ten days. Con finally recovered, and when the team returned Ward booked him to catch in a game with New York. Previous to the game Con ran against a cross-eyed man, and in the ensuing contest his hand was split so badly that he was laid up for some time.—New York World.

The Oldest Drummer.

J. C. Page is the oldest traveling man in the country. Mr. Page started out in 1832 with half a dozen shoes in an old fashioned handbag. He sought his first order from a former employer in Montpelier, Vt. This employer was a Green mountain merchant of the regulation type. He listened to the youthful and ardent commercial traveler and then exclaimed: "Why, boy, do you think you can sell shoes by samples?" The youth thought he could. After a mature deliberation the merchant remarked: "Well, Joel, I don't believe you would deceive me; you can send me a box of those shoes." To any one who has not watched the development of the boot and shoe business and the rapid increase in the number of commercial travelers of all classes every year this story must prove interesting. That an avocation employing hundreds of thousands of persons every year, and with hundreds of millions of dollars invested, could grow up during one man's lifetime almost surpasses belief.—Kansas City Times.

Gen. Grant's Sunday in Paris.

An incident told by Dr. Edward W. Hitchcock is suggestive to summer travelers. While he was minister of the American chapel in Paris Gen. Grant was invited by the president of the republic of France to occupy the grand stand at "Le Grand Prix" the great day of the races, which comes on Sunday. Such an invitation from the chief magistrate of a great nation is an honor which is almost a command. But Gen. Grant, replying in a note to the president, said in substance: "It is not in accordance with the custom of my countrymen or with the spirit of my religion to spend Sunday in this way. I therefore beg that you will permit me to decline the honor." Instead of accepting he attended public worship at the American chapel.—Congregationalist.

A Gigantic Octopus.

The officers and crews of the steamers plying between Tacoma and Olympia are on the lookout for an immense octopus, or devil fish, which is reported to exist in the waters between the mouth of the Nesqually river and Henderson's inlet. The monster has been seen at various times for a week. The men on the steamers are very backward in speaking of it, fearing that others will attempt to capture the prize. When last seen it was lying on the water vigorously splashing one of its thousand tails, and it looked to weigh at least 500 pounds. It measures from tip to tip, as nearly as can be estimated, fully fifty feet. Such a fish is unusual in these waters. Its peculiarity is a sort of deafening roar which it makes in quick succession.—Olympia (Wash.) Tribune.

The Butcher at a Discount.

Recently on the Atlantic and Pacific railroad a train of cars loaded with 5,000 fine merino sheep on the way from California to the Chicago market was wrecked, and every car but two was destroyed, more than 1,000 sheep being killed outright. The Indians in the vicinity took advantage of the occasion to supply themselves with mutton in sufficient quantities to last them for months to come. Some anxiety is now felt lest the wily red man, having once realized the advantages of "accidents," should arrange them in future to suit the exigencies of his larder.—Exchange.

All Settled.

Between the 1st of April and the 1st of May eight out of every ten tenants in the United States notified their landlords that unless the house was repapered, repainted, repaired and the rent lowered they would not remain another year. About one landlord in 500 consented, and about one tenant in 1,000 kept his word, and moved and was sorry for it. All is now settled until another spring.—Detroit Free Press.

Need of Care.

Never was there more need of care in making nominations to the legislature than exists this year, and the duty of Republican constituencies is plain and clear. —Fred Hovey did some grand playing Friday and Saturday, beating Mansfield his best opponent, after a hard battle. He has won the tankard valued at $150, which stands 12 inches high, and is of solid silver, and the Wellesley bowl, emblematic of the tournament, which is valued at $250, two splendid trophies, which his many friends here will be pleased to know, and all will be glad of the fine showing made by him throughout the tournaments.

—The scarcity of ice is beginning to be felt in some places, and it is to the enterprise and foresight of Mr. Geo. H. Ellis that citizens of Newton Centre can feel sure of an ample supply of ice throughout the summer. Two carts of the Needham Ice company have been filled from Mr. Ellis' houses this week, and the Nature Ice Co., which has been running 13 teams recently reduced them to four, and on Wednesday three of their teams were sent over to purchase ice from Mr. Ellis. The latter has a reserve supply of some 12,000 tons in New Hampshire, beside a large stock still on hand here.

—The Newton Centres visited Clifton last Saturday and won an exciting uphill race from the local team. The ground was rather wet and muddy on account of a hard shower just before playing was commenced and in consequence the error column was well filled. Kistler pitched effectively but six hits being made off his delivery in the seven innings he was in the box and Hatch supported him finely behind the bat. For the Newton Centres the best batting was done by Wright and Kistler, while Pierce and Cruff made several of the Clifton ten hits. Good plays were numerous, Paul and Cox each making a fine running catch and Cruff covered first base in splendid shape. The score:

—The largest number of victims yet taken by the patrol wagon, were loaded up here Sunday night. They were easily packed being "small in stature and big in sin" as appropriately expressed by one who knew them.

—Rev. F. G. Whitman, formerly pastor of the Baptist church here, returned from his travels in Palestine on Sunday, and is being entertained at Mr. W. W. Lowe's. After a short visit to friends at home he will go to Rangoon, Burmah, where he will have charge of their English speaking church.

—It is well for Boston to provide a special officer for Echo bridge property, but it is questionable as to the wisdom of his wearing almost the same uniform as the regular Newton force, and also adopting one of the numbers of a Newton officer. Citizens have been misled in such cases as to the jurisdiction of "specials."

—The champion checker players of Newton and Waltham, respectively, Messrs. Kybert and Wallace, visited several of the checker players of this place recently at the residence of Dr. Wm. Lowe, a pleasant evening was passed, and an invitation accepted to visit the Waltham Checker Club, at their clubroom in Waltham, next Saturday evening.

—Class '90 of St. Mary's Academy, Cambridge and friends visited Echo bridge, Thursday, July 17th, in a four horse barge, and enjoyed a pleasant day in the grove on the Wellesley side about 400 feet down the river from the bridge. —A camp of drunken hoodlums was broken up Sunday morning. Officer Leonard's attention being attracted by moving lights, and loud profanity, Mr. Dyson's barn, Chestnut street, at about 2 o'clock. Officer Mitchell was called, and the two officers investigated, finding a large company of young fellows in a wretched condition. The men were in a state of excitement and fifteen minutes later eleven fellows were loaded in, and taken to the station at West Newton. On Monday morning they were brought before Judge Kennedy and fined $5 and costs each. One of the local officers already has seven of these offenders' photos in his private gallery.

—Fire was discovered in the building known as the Colby Wringing factory, Highland avenue, Highlandville, early Wednesday morning. An alarm was given, and the entire Needham Fire Department responded. The building was occupied by Alex. Lyons, Jr., manufacturer of knit coolers, goods, whose loss is about $800; Otto Petee, Jr., manufacturer of an egg substitute, whose loss could not be ascertained, and by J. J. Morgan, who formerly manufactured wringing machines and had a lot of stored goods destroyed. Loss about $1000. The building was owned by William Carter, was worth about $5000 and insured for $2500. The cause of the fire is not known.

—The second meeting of the Friendly Aid Society was held in Borden Hall Thursday evening, and several new members were initiated to the order. The membership now numbers about 50.

—We still are interested in the reappearance of the watering cart. All travellers unite in saying that appearances in Wellesley are more like a city than a town in comparison with many parts of Newton.

—Two horses owned by Mr. Thompson became frightened last Tuesday and ran away, as they were not attached to any vehicle, the extent of damage was to one horse, which was cut in several places by falling.

—A gang of men employed by Chas. Hale commenced on the work of connecting Waban avenue with Washington street here, last Monday. This thoroughfare cuts through the center of Waban and is known as the valley farm and will make a very convenient connection with many other places when completed.

—Miss Louise Imogene Guiney writes a private letter from London, appropos of the sketch to her life lately published by Cora Stuart Wheeler, in "Daughters of America." "Mrs. Wheeler has quoted Mrs. Moulton's curious little error about Charles Lamb and his adorer undersigned. I knew him not at 7, nor yet at 17. At 17 I was only a fine book-hating barbarian, full of horses and pistols. I suppose it don't do to say that one's epitaph can be too flattering. At any rate it is charmingly done."
